After the date above-mentioned the appellants had been exoluded from participation in the profits of the joint family property to which they were admittedly entitled. The decree of the court below was erroneous in not giving the appellants a decree for mesne profits as claimed; and also as to the mode in which it directed the accounts to be taken.

A. M. Dunne for the respondents contended that the evidence clearly established that there had been no separation or partition as alleged by the appellants. There was an application on the record by Suraj Narain to have his name put on the Register as being the head of the joint family, but he did not ask for separation. And there had been no exclusion of the appellants from participation in the joint family profits. On the contrary, Suraj Narain had been offered a share of the profits and had declined to take it. In this view there were no circumstances which [85] justisfied a decree for mesne profits. The decree of the court below was right and should be affirmed.

De Gruyther, K. C. replied.

1912, December 10*th* :—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Mr. AMEER ALI :—

The point for determination involved in this appeal turns on the question whether the plaintiffs, who were admittedly members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, separated, as they allege, in October, 1901, or whether they continued joint in property, if not in food and worship, as the defendants contend, up to the institution of the suit in 1905.

The parties are Kashmiri Brahmins settled in Oudh, and, with the exception of the defendant Ratan Lal, are descended from one Pandit Bishan Narain who died over 40 years ago. He left four sons, of whom Pandit Suraj Narain the first plaintiff is the only one now surviving. On Bishan Narain's death his eldest son Raj Narain became the karta of the joint family. On his death in 1890, Ram Narain, the next in order of seniority, assumed charge of the family estate. He died in October, 1900, leaving a daughter who is married to the defendant Ratan Lal. Her son Raj Indar Narain appears to have been adopted by Ram Narain, and although his name frequently appears in the course of the present litigation he is no party to the action. On the death of Ram Narain, the defendant Bakht Narain, who has died since the institution of this suit, applied in November, 1900, for mutation of names in the Collector's register in respect of the joint family property. On the 8th of December, 1900, Suraj Narain filed a petition objecting to the mutation being effected in Bakht Narain's name alone, and praying that his name along with the plaintiffs' and Raj Indar Narain's might be entered in equal shares.

Same action appears to have been taken by the revenue authorities on the application of Bakht Narain, but before any definite order was made, the parties came to a settlement which was embodied in a deed of compromise. This document bears date the 27th February, 1901, and after reciting the facts connected with Suraj Narain's application, proceeds to state as follows:—

"Hence, in submitting this application we pray that mutation of names be effected in favour of Pandit Bakht Narain alone as the head of a joint family [86] and the status of the family has continued joint from the death of Pandit Ram Narain up to this day and shall remain so as long as any dispute does not arise among the heirs."

Bakht Narain's name was accordingly entered with regard to the entire joint estate, and matters apparently remained in status quo for the next two years. In consequence of some quarrel with his elder brother, Suraj Narain, on the 5th of May, 1903, applied to the revenue authorities to have his and Raj Indar Narain's names entered jointly in respect of two-thirds of the family properties.

The differences between the brothers seem to have been mainly connected with the question of the shares the two branches of the family would take upon a partition. As Bakht Narain had three sons and Suraj Narain had only two, the latter evidently apprehended that if the division were to be made per capita his branch would obtain a smaller share. The compromise of February 1901, which provided for a reference to the Advocate-General was really intended to remove this fear on the part of Suraj Narain.

On the 31st August, 1903, the Assistant Collector made an order in favour of Suraj Narain. This order was reversed on appeal by the Deputy Commissioner on the 30th of October, 1903. The Deputy Commissioner embodies in his judgment the actual contentions advanced before him by the parties, which afford a strong indication of the views they then took of the position of the family. Their Lordships will refer to this document when dealing with the arguments at the bar on this appeal.

After the Deputy Commissioner's order, Suraj Narain returned to the service of the Amethi Estate and remained there up to the end of 1904. In June, 1905 he, in conjunction with his surviving son, brought the present suit against Bakht Narain and his sons for a partition of the family properties. The various proceedings in the suit of Bakht Narain against Ratan Lal, in which Suraj Narain attempted to be joined as a plaintiff, have no direct bearing on the question their Lordships have to consider.

In the present action, the plaintiffs, Suraj Narain and his son, claimed to recover mesne profits from Bakht Narain and his branch of the family, on the ground that they had separated from the joint family, in October, 1901. Their contention was accepted by the Subordinate Judge who made a decree in their favour on [87] that basis. The Judicial Commissioners have on appeal reversed his decision; and the present appeal to his Majesty in Council is from their judgment. The learned Judges have carefully and elaborately examined the evidence on the question of the alleged separation in October, 1901; and as their Lordships agree with the main conclusions of the court below, they do not consider it necessary to deal with the matter in detail.

The principle applicable to cases of separation from the joint undivided family has been clearly enunciated by this Board in Rewun Persad v. Radha Beeby (1) and the well-known case of Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan (2). What may amount to a separation or what conduct on the part of some of the members may lead to disruption of the joint undivided family and convert a joint tenancy into a tenancy in common must depend on the facts of each case. A definite and unambiguous indication by one member of intention to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty may amount to separation. But to have that effect the intention must be unequivocal and clearly expressed. In the present case that element appears to their Lordships to be wholly wanting. By the compromise of February the parties had agreed to retain the status of jointness which had existed till then "until any dispute arose among the heirs." Suraj Narain alleges that he separated a few months later; there is, however, no writing in support of his allegation, nothing to show that at that time he gave expression to an unambiguous intention on his part to cut himself off from the joint undivided family. The oral evidence on which the allegation has mainly rested, as the learned Judges in the court below point out, is either inconclusive or unreliable. On the other hand, his conduct, borne out by documents, is clearly against his contention. After the compromise of February, 1901, the mutation proceedings instituted by Bakht Narain in November, 1900, were continued, and on the 2nd of January, 1902, the revenue officer directed that the statements of the two brothers should be recorded "to ascertain in whose name the entry should be made." And on the 8th of February the officer in question made the following order :—

"As the statements of Pandit Bakht Narain and Suraj Narain have been received and they unanimously show their willingness for the entry of the name [88] of Bakht Narain and declare his possession also, and as no one has filed any objection, it is therefore ordered that, after expunging the name of Ram Narain, deceased, the name of Bakht Narain be entered and the file be submitted to the officer in charge of pargana for sanction."

The conduct of Suraj Narain on this occasion was certainly not consistent with his allegation that he had severed his connection with the joint family, of which Bakht Narain was the acknowledged "head" in October, 1901.

In his application of the 5th May, 1903, among other matters, he speaks of a separation in "mess and worship," but there is no mention of a division of rights in property. Had his present statement been true, some reference would unquestionably have been made to it in this document. Separation from commensality, as was observed in the case of Rewun Persad v. Radha Beeby (1) does not as a necessary consequence effect a division of the joint undivided property. A separation in mess and worship may be due to various causes, and yet the family may continue joint in estate. In the present case there is evidence to show it arose from a difference in the religious opinions of the two brothers.

But the conduct of Suraj Narain after the order of the Deputy Commissioner on the 30th October, 1903, and the statements of his pleader before that officer, leave no doubt in their Lordships' mind that his present allegation is unfounded. The passage in the Deputy Commissioner's judgment which gives the substance of these statements is important. After reciting some of the facts connected with the dispute before him, the judgment proceeds thus :

"Ultimately on the 29th February, 1901, [sic], by virtue of a compromise, the name of Bakht Narain was entered as manager and head of a joint Hindu family. By a clause at the end of this agreement Bakht Narain was to remain so recorded so long as there should be no dispute among the warisan. There is now a discussion as to the meaning of the word warisan.

"Mr. Jackson for appellant argues that it clearly refers to the heirs of the executant of the compromise. Mr. Champat Rai for the respondent maintains that it refers to the executants themselves; and as they are now in disagreement he wishes to have his client's name recorded in the Government registers.

"Here it is necessary to say that there is a third party, Raj Indar Narain, said to be the adopted son of Ram Narain.

"Bakht Narain now denies the validity of the adoption."

And the order is, "I think that Suraj Narain and Raj Indar Narain" (the applicants in that case) "should go to the Civil Court and get their shares clearly defined."

[89] The statement of Mr. Champat Rai appears to their Lordships to involve a clear admission that the joint status had continued till then; and that as the parties were, to use his words as recorded by the Deputy Commissioner, "now in disagreement," he wished to have his client's name recorded in the Government registers.

After the dismissal of his application, as already observed, Suraj Narain went away to Amethi without making an attempt to go to the Civil Court. Although Suraj Narain made various attempts to come in as a plaintiff in the suit Bakht Narain had brought against Ratan Lal, it may be taken as well established that after the Deputy Commissioner's order matters remained in status quo until the present action was instituted. Their Lordships are of opinion that the allegation regarding a separation in October, 1901, of rights in property fails, and that the view of the learned Judges in the court below is well founded, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim mesne profits on that basis.

But it is urged that as the plaintiffs did not, after the disputes arose between the two brothers, receive any profits from the joint estate, they are entitled to mesne profits on the ground of exclusion. The evidence is clear and distinct on this point, and shows that Bakht Narain was all along offering Suraj Narain an allowance of Rs. 200 a month, which he refused to accept as being inadequate. This certainly does not, in thir Lordships' judgment, amount to exclusion from the joint estate.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal fails and ought to be dismissed with costs, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

A suit was brought on a bond in the court of the Munsif of Basti. In the course of that suit, the appellants produced the original bond, which was the basis of the claim, with an endorsement on it purporting to be an endorsement of payment of the amount due upon the bond. Witnesses were examined to support the endorsement. The court of first instance held that the endorsement was a forgery. An appeal was preferred and was heard by the Addional Judge of Basti. He also was opinion that the endorsement was forged and the evidence given in support of it was false. He affirmed the decree of the court of first instance. An appeal preferred to the High Court was dismissed under the provisions of order XLI, rule 11, of the Code of Civil Procedure. After these proceedings in the Civil Court, the plaintiffs to the suit made an application to the Additional Judge of Basti for sanction to prosecute Bhadesar Tiwari and others, and this application was granted. The persons against whom the sanction was thus given thereupon filed a petition in the High Court under section 195 (6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton for the appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, for the respondents.

BANERJI, J.:—This is an appeal from an order of the Additional Judge of Basti granting sanction for the prosecution of the appellants for offences punishable under sections 471 and 193 of the Indian Penal Code. The appeal, being one from an order passed [91] under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, should be deemed to be an appeal under that Code and thus a criminal appeal. It should have been registered as such, and I have heard it as a criminal appeal. It appears that a suit was brought on a bond in the court of the Munsif of Basti. In the course of that suit, the appellants produced the original bond, which was the basis of the claim, with an endorsement on it purporting to be an endorsement of payment of the amount due upon the bond. Witnesses were examined to support the endorsement. The court of first instance held that the endorsement was a forgery. An appeal was preferred and was heard by the Additional Judge of Basti. He also was of opinion that the endorsement was forged and the evidence given in support of it was false. He affirmed the decree of the court of first instance. An appeal preferred to this Court was, I am informed, dismissed under the provisions of order XLI, rule 11, of the Code of Civil Procedure. After these proceedings in the Civil Court, the plaintiffs to the suit made an application to the Additional Judge of Basti for sanction to prosecute the present appellants, and on this application the order giving sanction now complained of was made.

It is urged on behalf of the appellants that the Additional Judge of Basti had no jurisdiction to give the sanction asked for. In my opinion, this contention is untenable. The document which was found to be forged was given in evidence in the suit, which, in the stage of appeal, was pending in the court of the Additional Judge. It was thus given in evidence in a proceeding in the court of the Additional Judge. Similarly, the false evidence was given in a proceeding which was pending in the stage of appeal in the Additional Judge's court. Therefore, under clauses (b) and (c) of section 195 the learned Additional Judge was competent to sanction the prosecution of the appellants. It is true that the document was not produced in his court but it was given in evidence in the appeal which was pending in that court. That appeal was certainly a proceeding within the meaning of section 195. The Additional Judge had, therefore, jurisdiction to make the order appealed against and this appeal must fail. I accordingly dismiss it.

Act No. VII of 1870 (Court Fees Act), section 7, clause IX—Decree on mortgage—Separate liabilities of distinct properties—Appeal in respect of distinct properties.

In a suit for sale on a mortgage a decree was passed declaring the separate liabilities of the different properties mortgaged. One of the defendants, whose property was held liable for specific sums of money, appealed. Held that the proper court fee payable on the memorandum of appeal was a fee calculated on the sum of money for which the defendant's property was held liable, and not one calculated on the full amount of the decree.

THIS was a reference as to amount of court fee payable in this case on the memorandum of appeal. The following report of the office gives the material facts:—

"The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for recovery of Rs. 48,000 principal and interest on foot of a mortgage, dated the 28th of March, 1909, by enforcement of hypothecation lien. The original document, the basis of the suit, was not produced, as it could not be found, and the suit was brought on the basis of a copy of the bond.

"The suit was resisted on various grounds. However, the court below decreed the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 14,554-7-0 of the amount claimed together with pendente lite interest and proportionate costs and made the different properties liable for the rateable contribution. The property of mauza Bisoha was made liable to contribute Rs. 6,215-0-8, and of Tehra Man Rs. 1,012-11-5. These are the two properties with which we are concerned in this appeal.

"A decree for sale under order XXXIV, rule 4, was prepared. The decree awarded to the plaintiffs—

1. Rupees 14,554-7-0, principal and interest on foot of mortgage.
2. Rupees 11,220-14-0, pendente lite interest.
3. Rupees 622-9-6, proportionate costs.

Total, Rs. 26,397-14-6.

"Against the said decree the defendants abovenamed have preferred this appeal praying that the suit may be dismissed against them. The appeal is valued at Rs. 7,227-12-1 the [93] contribution money in respect of the two villages mentioned above and a court fee of Rs. 305 has been paid thereon. I may say here that the proper court fee payable on the said valuations is Rs. 365. The first four grounds of appeal taken in the memorandum of appeal affect the whole decree obtained by the plaintiffs in the suit, and if they succeed the plaintiffs would naturally be deprived of the decree obtained by them in the suit.

"On the authority of a ruling of the Hon'ble Taxing Judge in F. A. No. 197 of 1912, Jugal Kishore v. Hirde Narain the defendants appellants are liable to pay a court fee of Rs. 915 on the amount of decree i.e., Rs. 26,397-14-6. A court fee of Rs. 305 having been paid, there is, therefore, a deficiency of Rs. 610 to be made good by the defendants appellants on this memorandum of appeal."

The matter was referred to the Taxing Officer, who referred the question to the Taxing Judge with the following remarks :—

"The appellants in this case are defendants Nos. 5 to 8.

"The facts of the appeal are stated in taxing clerk's note of 31st October, 1912, and the latter stated that court fee amounting to Rs. 915 was payable on the whole amount of the decree Rs. 26,397-14-6.

"The learned advocate for the defendants appellants maintained that court fees should be paid on the value of the appeal, only, Rs. 7,227-12-1. This would amount to Rs. 365.

"This case is, I consider, similar to F. A. No. 197 of 1912, in which you passed an order, dated the 23rd February, 1912. In that order you stated that 'the defendants contest the mortgage as a whole, and they can only save their property from the operation of the decree by succeeding in their pleas mentioned above. If they so succeed, the mortgage falls to the ground.'

"The learned advocate for the defendants appellants urges a distinction, however, between this case and that of F. A. No. 197 of 1912. Here, he says, the liability of each property for the proportionate amount of the mortgage debt is defined : in the other case, it was a joint mortgage and the liability of each property was not separately defined. He also declares that the result of this appeal cannot affect the parties who are not appealing.

[94] "In the face, however, of your order of 23rd February, 1912, order XVI, rule 33, of Civil Procedure Code, and taxing officer's ruling of 27th February, 1912, in S. A. No. 680 of 1911, where a part of the property was exempted in the decree, I do not agree.

"But the matter is one of general importance, and under section 5 of the Court Fees Act, I beg to refer the matter."

The following decision was given by the Taxing Judge.

TUDBALL, J :—This case is clearly distinguishable from the case in F. A. No. 197 of 1912. Here various properties have been held separately liable for separate sums of money. The present appellants are transferees of two parts of property which have been held liable for specific sums of money. If they succeed in their appeal it is only those properties which will be released from the operation of the decree and it is only these sums which the decree-holder will lose. The rest of the decree-holder's decree for various other sums and for various other properties will still hold good even if the appellants' appeal succeeds. The correct stamp on this appeal will be Rs. 365. I allow one fortnight to make good the deficiency.

BALDEO SINGH AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. KALKA PRASAD AND ANOTHER (Defendants).*

[25th November, 1912.]

Act No. VII of 1870 (Court Fees Act), section 7, clause IX—Suit for sale on a mortgage —Court fee payable in appeal—Value of the subject matter—Amount declared due on date fixed for payment.

A decree for sale on a mortgage declared that on the date fixed for payment a specified sum would be due from the mortgagor, which included interest pendente lite.

Held that the court fee payable in appeal from such decree was to be assessed, not on the amount claimed in the suit but upon the amount with interest pendente lite found due by the court of first instance at the date fixed for payment.

[Dist. 36 All. 40.]

THE question in this case was as to the amount upon which the court fee is payable on a memorandum of appeal against a decree awarding mortgage money with interest pendente lite to date [95] of payment and declaring the amount so awarded. The following extract from the office report gives the material facts.

"The plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 1,191-11-6 on account of principal and interest calculated up to the date of suit on foot of a mortgage, dated the 7th December, 1885, executed by the ancestor of the defendants in favour of one of the plaintiffs and ancestors of the other plaintiffs.

"The court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' claim with future interest till the expiry of six months from the date of decree at the bond rate and allowed no interest thereafter. A decree for sale under order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure was accordingly drawn up which awarded to the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 1,487-7-6 composed of the following items:

Rs. 1,191-11-6 amount claimed.

Rs. 129-12-0 pendente lite interest.

Rs. 166 costs of the suit.

Total Rs. 1,487-7-6.

"Against the said decree the defendants preferred an appeal to the lower appellate court valuing it at Rs. 1,191-11-6, the amount originally claimed by the plaintiffs, and paying a court fee of Rs. 85, as was paid by the plaintiffs on the plaint, and praying for a reversal of the decree of the court of first instance. The only ground taken in the memorandum of appeal was to the effect :—" It is fully proved from the evidence and probabilities that the consideration of the bond in suit has been paid off. The lower court is not right in its finding to the contrary." The lower appellate court allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. Hence the plaintiffs have preferred this second appeal.

"According to the long established practice of this Court I reported on 18th June, 1912, that the proper valuation of the appeal inclusive of pendente lite interest was Rs. 1,321-6-6 on which a court fee of Rs. 95 was payable, and that a court fee of Rs. 85 having been paid there was therefore a deficiency of Rs. 10 due by the defendants for the lower appellate court. The report was initialled by the learned vakil for the defendants respondents on the 20th June, 1912. He did not dispute the accuracy of the report within three weeks thereafter under rule 10, [96] chapter III. The report was laid before the Hon'ble Judge receiving applications by order of the taxing officer. The Hon'ble Judge ordered the matter to be laid before the taxing officer who after referring the matter to the learned counsel, and consulting the Hon'ble Taxing Judge, to the best of my recollection, passed the following order on the 22nd July, 1912. 'It is not open to the learned vakil to dispute the accuracy of the office report now. He should have objected within three weeks of the 20th June, 1912. He is time-barred by rule 10, chapter III, High Court Rules.'

"On the matter coming on again before the Hon'ble Judge receiving applications on 6th August, 1912, the report was disputed a second time, and it was directed that the matter should be referred to the Bench hearing the appeal.

"In spite of the order of the taxing officer with reference to the Hon'ble Court's Rules quoted above, it is, I respectfully submit, expedient that the question of pendente lite interest should be decided once for all as there are several other similar objections raised by the learned vakils in other cases and our present taxing officer has been pleased to order that they should be kept in abeyance pending orders of the Hon'ble Court in this particular case."

The taxing officer thereupon recorded as follows:—"It is important that a final decision should be reached on the questions raised by the taxing clerk. I am in entire agreement with the decisions of the previous taxing officers Messrs. Hose and Burkitt."

Babu Sital Prasad Ghose for the respondent.

The words "the amount claimed" in section 7 of the Court Fees Act mean, the specific amount claimed in the plaint, that is, the amount of principal and interest up to the date of the suit. There being no provision in the Act for paying court fees upon interest pendente lite, upon the analogy of the provision of section 11 of the Court Fees Act relating to mesne profits, it follows that the words "subject matter in dispute" in article 1, schedule 1 of the Act must mean either the whole or a portion of the "amount claimed" which was the only thing upon which the parties joined issue. In the present case the appellants in the lower [97] appellate court did not challenge the adjudication of the court of first instance with regard to interest pendente lite under section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Therefore no question of such interest ever formed "the subject matter in dispute in appeal" to that court.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, for the appellant, was not called on to reply.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, J. J.:—This suit was one for sale on the basis of a mortgage. The plaintiffs claimed a certain sum as principal with interest up to the date of institution together with pendente lite and future interest and in default of payment, asked for sale of the property. The main defence was that the debt had been satisfied. The first court held in favour of the plaintiffs and passed a decree, which is worded as follows:—

"This suit coming on this 10th of July 1911, it is hereby declared that the amount due to the plaintiffs on account of principal, interest and costs, calculated up to the 9th day of January, 1912, is Rs. 1,487-7-6 and it is decreed as follows. No order is passed as to future interest.

(1) That if the defendant pays into court the amount so declared due on or before the said 9th day of January, 1912, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the property and shall, if so required, retransfer the property to the defendant free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him.

(2) That, if such payment is not made on or before the said day of 9th January, 1912, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale, &c."

From this decree the defendants appealed, and the sole ground of appeal was that it had been fully proved by evidence that the consideration of the bond had been paid off. They valued the appeal at Rs. 1,191-11-6, the amount of the principal, plus interest up to the date of the institution of the suit, as claimed by the plaintiffs, and they paid court fees accordingly. The lower appellate court held in their favour and dismissed the suit on a preliminary point. The plaintiffs have come up here on appeal. The taxing officer has reported that the defendants on their [98] memorandum of appeal to the lower appellate court ought to have paid court fees on Rs. 1,321-7-6, the amount decreed against them by the court of first instance, which included interest subsequent to the date of institution. The court fee payable by the defendants in the lower appellate court is an ad valorem fee according to the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute in appeal. In view of the wording of the decree granted by the court of first instance it is quite clear that the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute is Rs. 1,321-7-6 (exclusive of costs) which the defendants had been ordered to pay on or before the 9th of January, 1912. It may be that the decree is not properly drawn up, but we cannot go behind the decree in deciding this matter. It is quite clear that as the decree stood it imposed on the defendants a liability to pay a sum of Rs. 1,321-7-6 on a fixed date and by the appeal they sought to set aside that liability. An argument has been strongly pressed upon us that in the circumstances of the present case the subject matter of the appeal is the same as the subject matter of the suit, i.e., the value of the plaintiff's claim. In our opinion, the decree being as it is, there is no force in this contention. The value of the subject matter of the appeal before the court below is as we have stated above. The defendants must make good the deficiency as reported by the taxing officer.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 92 (i)—Procedure—Muhammadan law—Waqf—Trust for a public purpose of a religious or charitable nature.

Where a trust is a trust created for a public purpose of a religious or charitable nature (in this case a waqf under the Muhammadan law) no suit can be maintained for the removal of a duly appointed trustee, save in conformity with the provisions of section 92, sub-section (1), of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[Ref. 31 M. L. J. 280 ; 35 A. 459.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

One Sahib Ali erected a mosque and an Imambara at Jaunpur. After his death his wife Bikani Bibi became owner, and in 1856 she executed a deed of endowment with respect to this [99] property, and it was provided therein that Himavat Ali, the brother of her deceased husband, was to be the first mutawalli and after him his descendants, generation after generation, whoever among them was a fit and proper person. After Himavat Ali his son Mehdi Hasan became mutawalli. During his tenure of office a suit was brought by two persons seeking for the removal of Mehdi Husain on the ground that he had been guilty of breaches of trust. He was removed by the District Judge and filed an appeal before the High Court. During the pendency of that appeal he died. His counsel brought his son, the present plaintiff, on the record as his legal representative. Subsequently the appeal was dismissed. The plaintiff then instituted the present suit for a declaration that he was rightful mutawalli, as he was a descendant of Himavat Ali, and for the removal of the defendant, who had been appointed to that office by the District Judge when he removed Mehdi Husain. The lower court dismissed the suit on the grounds (1) that plaintiff had not obtained the sanction required by section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the suit, (2) the question was res judicata and (3) the suit was time-barred. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman (with him Mr. S. A. Haidar, Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba and Maulvi Rahmat Ullah) for the appellant :—

Under the Muhammadan law the office was to devolve according to the provisions of the deed of endowment and the appointment of the defendant was bad. The suit was not one under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure at all. It was not brought by the plaintiff as a member of the Shia community to which the waqf belonged. The plaintiff sought to enforce his private right to be appointed mutawalli. Waqfs under Muhammadan law were not necessarily public, they might be for the benefit of a family. The law of procedure could not override the provisions of Muhammadan law. In the former suit the question was not as to the qualification of the present plaintiff. Section 92 refers to suits brought on behalf of the public :—Budree Das Mukim v. Chooni Lal

Johurry (1). The purpose of the section was to limit the number of suits brought on a representative basis : it could not affect the right of [100] a private individual. Further, the District Judge was not competent to appoint the defendant. The section no doubt was wide enough to enable a court to appoint a Christian or a Hindu. It was unlikely that it would do so, but there was nothing to prevent its doing so. Besides, an imambara was not a public place: Delrus Banoo Begum v. Kazee Abdoor Rahman (2) [BANERJI, J.—Referred to Tajammul Husain v. Fazal Rasul (3).]

Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the respondent was not called upon.

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J.:—The facts connected with this appeal are shortly as follows:—In the year 1856 one Musammat Bikani Bibi made a deed of waqf of certain property for the purpose of meeting the expenses of a certain mosque and imambara. The deed provided that she had appointed one Syed Himayat Ali, son-in-law of her husband's eldest brother, to be the nazir and mutawalli and that after him the fittest and ablest in the family, who should be a follower of the Shia sect, and a good and religious man, should be appointed, generation after generation, as nazir and mutawalli of the waqf. In the course of time the office of mutawalli was held by the plaintiff's father. During his incumbency a suit was instituted before the District Judge of Jaunpur alleging that he had been guilty of breaches of trust and seeking to remove him from being mutawalli. That suit was instituted under the provisions of section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, which was then in force. The result of the suit was that the learned District Judge removed the plaintiff's father from the office of trustee and appointed the defendant Syed Ali Jan Bahadur mutawalli in his place. An appeal was taken to this Court against the decree of the District Judge, but pending the hearing the plaintiff's father died. At the instance of the present plaintiff he was brought on to the record as the representative of his father, the appellant, but when the case came on for hearing it was dismissed, the appellant's counsel stating that he was unable for certain reasons to press the appeal.

The present suit has now been instituted claiming various reliefs, but there can be no question that in substance the plaintiff asks that the present mutwalli should be removed and that he [101] should be appointed mutawalli in his place, and that he should have a declaration that he is entitled to hold the trust property as mutawalli. The plaintiff claims that he fulfils the various conditions mentioned by the maker of the waqf as essential qualifications of the mutawalli.

The court below has dismissed the suit upon the ground that the suit is not maintainable. It was contended amongst other things that the trust was not a trust for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature within the meaning of section 92. In our opinion, having regard to the terms of the waqf, and its decription as given in the plaint itself, it is impossible to hold that the present trust was not trust created for public purposes of a charitable and religious nature, and we do not consider it necessary to say anything further upon this point.

As already stated the plaintiff himself had his name brought on the record as the representative of his deceased father, and the appeal was decided with him as a party. This perhaps would be almost sufficient ground for dismissing the present appeal. It is however urged that he could not legally have been brought on to the record because the cause of action did not survive. He was there, it is said, not as his father's son and heir, but as a person claiming to be, in the events which had happened, the person who was entitled to be appointed mutawalli. We therefore do not decide the appeal upon this ground. The important question is whether or not the present suit is maintainable. Bearing in mind that the trust was a trust created for a public purpose of a religious or charitable nature, it is clear that the defendant now is and was at the time of the institution of this suit in fact the duly appointed mutawalli of the trust. It is, therefore, obvious that the plaintiff seeks in the present suit to have him removed from his office and to have himself appointed mutawalli instead of the defendant. There is an express provision in section 92 of the present Code of Civil Procedure that no suit claiming relief of this nature can be instituted, save in conformity with the provisions of sub-section (1), that is to say, it can only be brought by two or more persons after sanction has been obtained in the manner provided by the section.

Appeal dismissed.

Act No. XLV of 1860 (Indian Penal Code), sections 182, 193—Complaint—Statement made to the Magistrate as head of the police and not as a magistrate.

P. appeared before a District Magistrate and made a statement in which he accused a certain police officer of having beaten him, demanded a bribe of him and locked him up in the police hawalat. He stated, however, that he did not wish to make a complaint, but only desired that an inquiry should be made. Nevertheless the Magistrate examined P. on oath, and subsequently, the charge having been found to be baseless, P. was convicted under sections 182 and 193 of the Indian Penal Code. Held that, inasmuch as P. had expressly stated that he did not wish to make a complaint, the statement must be taken to have been made to the District Magistrate, not as magistrate, but as head of the district police, and the conviction under section 193 of the Code could not be upheld.

The facts of the case are fully set forth in the judgment of the Court.

Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji (for Mr. W. Wallach), for the applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

TUDBALL, J.:—The applicant Phulel went to the District Magistrate and made a statement before him that a certain police officer had beaten him, demanded a bribe from him and locked him in the police hawalat. He added that he did not wish to make a complaint, as it would not be possible to prove the complaint, but he wished the District Magistrate to make an inquiry so as to prevent the police officer behaving tyranically towards him. In spite of the fact that he stated that he did not wish to make a complaint, the Magistrate made him take the oath and make a statement.

Inquiry disclosed that the charge was groundless. Phulel was put on his trial under sections 211 and 182, Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that section 211 did not apply as the man distinctly refrained from instituting a complaint, but held that he was guilty of offences under sections 182 and 193, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced [103] him to separate sentences for each of those offences. On appeal the learned Additional Judge held that the man had committed only one offence and that he should not be punished twice over for the same act. He held that the facts established an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code. He maintained the conviction and sentence under that section and set aside the conviction and sentence under section 182. It is quite clear that when the applicant stated that he did not wish to institute criminal proceedings or make a complaint, the Magistrate was not moved qua Magistrate, but only as district head of the police. It was unnecessary and perhaps unlawful for the Magistrate under these circumstances to have forced the man to take an oath. As the Additional Judge has said, the man committed only one offence. He either committed an offence under section 182 or 211, Indian Penal Code. The conviction under section 193 cannot stand. I, therefore, alter the finding of the court below to a conviction under section 182, Indian Penal Code, and I maintain the sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment which was originally imposed under that section.

Conviction altered.

Criminal Procedure Code, section 125—Security to keep the peace—Procedure—Appeal—Jurisdiction.

A District Magistrate taking action under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot treat an application made under that section as an appeal and reverse the order of a first class Magistrate on the facts. If he considers the order to be wrong on the merits he can exercise his revisional powers and submit the record to the High Court, but the cancellation of bonds contemplated by section 125 can only be on the ground that the bonds are no longer necessary.

[Ref. 51 I. C. 478=20 Cr. L. J. 489=41 All. 651; fol. 67 I. C. 350=20 A. L. J. 521=23 Cr. L. J. 398; 71 I. C. 668=24 Cr. L. J. 204: Rel. 73 I. C. 504=24 Cr. L. J. 616.]

In this case one Partab Singh was bound over by a magistrate of the first class to keep the peace. Partab Singh applied to the District Magistrate under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for cancellation of the bonds. The District Magistrate treated this application as an appeal; went into the evidence; passed an order accepting the appeal, and cancelled [104] the bonds. Against this order Banarsi Das, who had applied to have Partab Singh bound over, applied in revision to the High Court, and his main contention was that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to treat the application under section 125 as an appeal and to consider the merits of the first class Magistrate's order.

TUDBALL J:—The facts of this case are briefly as follows:—The present applicant Banarsi Das applied to a Magistrate of the first class asking him to bind over the opposite party to keep the peace. The Magistrate after recording all the evidence passed an order that the opposite party should furnish security for a certain period. The opposite party Partab Singh made an application to the District Magistrate which purported to be one under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The grounds of this application were, however, directed against the order of the Magistrate binding him over to keep the peace. The application was treated as an appeal by the officiating District Magistrate, was registered as such and he went into the evidence on the record, and his order ended as follows:—"I accept the appeal and cancel the order of the lower court; all the bonds are cancelled." It is quite clear that the officiating District Magistrate who passed the order on the application treated the matter before him as an appeal and he came to the conclusion that the Magistrate's order was a bad one ab inito. An examination of the Code will show to the officiating District Magistrate that no appeal whatsoever lies to him from an order of this description by a first class Magistrate. It was only in his power to examine the record, and if he found that an improper order had been passed, to submit the case to this Court for the exercise of its revisional power. His order is not an order which can be passed under section 125 of the Code. The cancellation of bonds contemplated in that section can be only on the ground that the bonds are no longer necessary. The Magistrate has decided the appeal without having any jurisdiction to do so. His order is void, and I therefore set it aside. The matter, however, is one concerning the peace of the district; and I think it advisable [105] in the circumstances of the case that the record should be placed before the present District Magistrate so that he may examine it himself and see whether or not it is any longer necessary to keep the opposite party under his bond. I direct accordingly.

Order set aside.

want of prosecution, but was bound to consider the grounds of appeal and to decide the case on the merits.

IN this case the appellants, Baldeo Prasad and Musammat Ram Piari filed a partnership suit in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Fatehgarh. The suit was dismissed. They filed an appeal in the court of the District Judge. This appeal was adjourned several times either on the application of the parties or by the court suo motu. Finally it was fixed for the 20th of December, 1911. On that date the male appellant appeared and asked for two days' adjournment to procure the attendance of his pleaders. Thereupon the court called upon him to argue the case himself, and, on his confessing his inability to do so, proceeded to dismiss the appeal as not being supported. The appellants perferred the present appeal to the High Court.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (for Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji) for the respondents.

[106] TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ. :—This appeal arises out of the following circumstances. The plaintiffs appellants Baldeo Prasad and Musammat Ram Piari filed a partnership suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court against the two respondents. The suit was dismissed. They filed an appeal, which was admitted on the 17th March, 1911, in the court of the District Judge. The date fixed for the hearing of the appeal, was the 6th of June. On the 31st of May on the application of the respondents the court fixed the 12th of July instead of the 6th of June. On that date the appeal was not heard, as the District Judge had no time by reason of other work. It was adjourned to the 28th of July. Again the court suo motu adjourned the appeal to the 28th of September. On that date at the appellant's request and with the consent of the respondents the appeal was adjourned to the 8th of November. On the 3rd of November the court of its own motion fixed the 6th of December for the hearing of the appeal. On this date the respondent's pleader was absent having gone to the Delhi Durbar. The case was adjourned for this reason to the 20th of December. So far the case had been adjourned only once at the request of the appellants and twice at the request of the respondents and three times for the convenience of the court. On the 20th of December the male appellant Baldeo Prasad appeared and applied for two days' adjournment to secure the attendance of his pleaders. One of them had gone to Agra and was expected back on the 22nd of December. The other had gone into the camp. There is no order on the application, but apparently it was rejected and the Judge called on the male appellant to argue the case. Not being a lawyer, the man was unable to do so, and fairly said that he had nothing to say. The learned Judge's judgment runs as follows :—"Respondents' pleader urges that as the appeal is not supported it should be dismissed. I agree." For this reason the District Judge dismissed the appeal without going into the merits. The female appellant Musammat Ram Piari subsequently filed an application for hearing on the ground that sufficient cause for her non-appearance could be established. This application was rejected. There are two appeals before us, one from the original decree and the other from the order rejecting the application of Musammat Ram Piari. [107] It is quite clear that the learned District Judge is wrong. To ask a non-legal appellant to argue his case is asking for what is practically impossible. The application for adjournment shows clearly and distinctly that he did not wish to drop his appeal. He wished to press it. The bare fact that he could not argue it did not justify the District Judge in dismissing it. It was necessary for him under the circumstances to consider the grounds of appeal and to decide the case on the merits. This he has not done. We therefore admit the appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and remand the case to his court with directions to readmit the appeal to its original number in the register and to dispose of it on the merits. Costs will follow the event.

IN a suit for partition of the property of a joint Hindu family between two branches thereof, the widow of one of the members of the family was made a party defendant. The subject matter of the suit was referred to arbitration, but to the submission the widow was not a party. An award was made, upon which a decree followed which was in accordance with the reward. court the suits were filed, and who was appointed arbitrator not only with the consent of the parties but also with the sanction of the Government. Decrees have been passed in both the suits in accordance with the award, and it is against these decrees that the two appeals before us have been preferred as also the appeal No. 21 of 1911 in which Musammat Janki is the appellant. The decree having been made in accordance with the award, a preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lies. If the award is legally valid, the decree being in accordance with the award no appeal can be preferred from the decree and the objection must prevail. We have therefore to determine whether the award is a legally valid award.

Mr. O'Conor, who appears for the appellants, challenges the validity of the award on the sole ground that Musammat Janki was not a party to the submission. If Musammat Janki was not a necessary party to the suit, the fact of her not joining in the submission would not in our opinion affect the validity of the award. As regards Musammat Janki the allegation of the plaintiff was that she was in possession of some villages in lieu of maintenance. Her statement was also to the same effect, and what she claimed was that her right of maintenance should not in any way be affected by the partition claimed in the two suits. It thus appears that all parties were agreed that she was not a necessary party having regard to the nature of her rights. Had the case gone to trial no question of her rights could have been determined in a partition suit. So that it is manifest that she was not, as the parties themselves also practically admitted, a [109] necessary party to the suit. The fact that she did not join in the submission did not therefore in our opinion vitiate the award. The decree having been passed in accordance with the award, no appeal lies and these two appeals must fail.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with two sets of costs, one set to be obtained by Parsotam Saran respondent and the other by Sahu Dharam Kirti respondent. The objections under order XLI, rule 22, fail and are dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code, section 439—Revision—Powers of High Court—District Registrar.

A District Registrar is not a court subordinate to the High Court either on the civil, criminal or revenue side, and the High Court has no power to interfere with the order of the Registrar impounding a document and calling upon the applicants to show cause why they should not be prosecuted for forgery.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The District Registrar of Mirzapur had before him an application with reference to a certain document for an order of compulsory registration of that document. The Sub-Registrar had refused to register it on the

"The deed in question is impounded. An inquiry will be held by me under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, on my return from leave. The writer of the deed, the attesting witnesses, Khub Lal and Udit Narain, will be called on to show cause why they should not be prosecuted for forgery."

[110] TUDBALL, J. :—This application has arisen out of the following facts :—

The District Registrar of Mirzapur had before him an application in reference to a certain document for an order of compulsory registration of that document. The Sub-Registrar had refused to register it on the ground of denial. After making some inquiry the District Registrar refused to register it on the ground that he believed the document to be a forgery. He passed the order on the 27th of July, 1912. Immediately below the order he recorded the following order :—

" The deed in question is impounded. An inquiry will be held by me under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, on my return from leave. The writer of the deed, the attesting witnesses, Khub Lal and Udit Narain, will be called on to show cause why they should not be prosecuted for forgery."

So far no action appears to have been taken by the District Registrar. Presumably the present application, though it does not say so, asks this Court on the criminal side to pass an order that the District Registrar should make no such inquiry. The District Registrar may or may not have power to pass such an order qua District Registrar. He may or may not have power as District Registrar to make the inquiry qua District Registrar or even as a private person. But with that I have nothing to do. I fail to see that I have power to forbid a District Registrar to make an inquiry into the matter if he so pleases. He is not a court subordinate to this Court either on the civil, criminal or revenue side, and it is a matter in which at this stage I see no 'ground for interferng even if I had power to do so. The application is rejected.

[Fol. 18 C. W. N. 1013=24 I. C. 42 ; Ref: 80 I. C. 389.]

THE facts of this case were, briefly, as follows:—The mortgage bond in suit was executed in favour of the plaintiff No. 1 and the ancestor of the other plaintiffs. A subsequent mortgage was executed in favour of Ram Saran. In a suit brought by Ram Saran on foot of his mortgage he admitted the existence of the plaintiff's prior mortgage and impleaded the plaintiff No. 1 and some of the predecessors in interest of the other plaintiffs as prior mortgagees. Among the reliefs claimed in that suit Ram Saran offered to be allowed to redeem the prior mortgage. In that suit the prior mortgagees, who had been thus impleaded, entered no appearance and made no defence. The decree which was passed embodied a copy of the plaint in which the prior mortgage was mentioned, but in the operative part of the decree there was no mention of that mortgage and no direction that the sale should be subject to any prior incumbrance. The property was sold in execution of that decree and purchased by Inayatullah, who obtained possession. Thereafter the plaintiffs brought the present suit on foot of their mortgage. The court of first [112] instance decreed the suit. On appeal the District Judge held that the suit was barred by res judicata, inasmuch as the present plaintiffs had taken no steps about their mortgage although they had been impleaded in Ram Saran's suit. The plaintiffs thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Jang Bahadur Lal, for the appellants:—

The suit is not barred by res judicata; for the matter now in issue, namely, the mortgage sued on, was not at all in issue in the previous suit. In that suit the existence of this mortgage was admitted in the plaint itself and was not denied by any party. There was no dispute about the matter, and it was, therefore, not in issue between the parties. So there was no need for the present plaintiffs to appear and prove their mortgage in that suit. The case is thus different from those relied on by the lower appellate court namely:—Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (3), Gopal Lal v. Benarasi Pershad Chowdhry (5) and Nattu Krishnama Chariar v. Annangara Chariar (4). In the first two cases the prior mortgage upon which the subsequent suit was brought was not set out or admitted by the plaintiffs in the previous suit; in fact the holder of that prior mortgage was impleaded not as such but in a different capacity. It was, therefore, his duty to disclose and prove his prior mortgage. The third case was that of a holder of two successive mortgages who had obtained a decree on foot of his first mortgage without disclosing the second, and then brought a suit upon the second mortgage. In the present case the plaintiff in the former suit not only disclosed and admitted the prior mortgage but actually offered to redeem it. Nothing, therefore, remained to be done by the prior mortgagees in that suit the omission to do which can operate as a bar under explanation IV to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I rely also on the following cases:—Katchalai Mudali v. Kuppanna Mudali (1), Arunachala Reddi v. Perumal Reddi (2), Srinivasa Rao Saheb v. Yamunabhai Ammall (3). The same remarks which have already been submitted with reference to the cases relied on by the lower appellate court apply to the two [113] following cases:—Gajadhar Teli v. Bhagwanta (4), Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Prabhu Singh (5). In the latter case the existence alone of the mortgage had been admitted and not its priority, which should, therefore, have been established.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondents:—

The suit is barred by res judicata. Although in Ram Saran's suit the existence of the prior mortgage was admitted by him and he offered to redeem it, yet the decree that was passed in that suit did not provide for the prior mortgage but ordered the sale free from any incumbrance. It was the duty of the prior mortgagees, who were made parties, to safeguard their interests by taking care to see that a proper decree, making due provision for their rights, was passed. They did not do so, nor did they get the decree amended or corrected. The result is that they have lost those rights and cannot enforce them in a subsequent suit. Vide p. 437 of I. L. R. 24 All. cited already. This duty of theirs could not be dispensed with by reason merely of the fact that Ram Saran had admitted their mortgage. Moreover, the mortgagors, who were parties to Ram Saran's suit, did not admit the prior mortgage. It was the duty of the prior mortgagees, therefore, to prove their mortgage as against the mortgagors. In the case in I. L. R. 29 Mad. 84, the mortgagor, too, had admitted the prior mortgage. As regards the mortgagors or their representatives in interest, therefore, the prior mortgagees are precluded from setting up their mortgage. The cases relied on by the lower appellate court and the last two cases cited by the appellants support me.

Munshi Jang Bahadur Lal, in reply:—

The fact that the decree in the previous suit did not in terms reserve the rights of the prior mortgagees does not necessarily defeat those rights. Vide I. L. R. 29 Mad. 84, and M. W. N. 1912, p. 41, cited above.

KNOX and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—It appears that one Ram Phal Man Tiwari executed a deed of mortgage in favour of Guptar Pande and Ajudhia Pande on the 20th of September, 1890. Ram Phal Man executed another mortgage subsequently in 1892 in respect of the same property in favour of Ram Saran. In 1897 [114] Ram Saran brought a suit on the basis of the mortgage of 1892 for the recovery of the mortgage money by sale of the hypothecated property. The suit was brought against Ram Phal Man mortgagor and against Ajudhia Pande and some of the legal representatives of Guptar Pande, who had died prior to the institution of the suit. Some other subsequent transferees were also impleaded in the case as defendants. Ram Saran prayed for the relief, among others, that he should be allowed to redeem the prior mortgage of 1890 in favour of Guptar Pande and Ajudhia Pande. The mortgagor and the prior mortgagees did not defend the suit or put in any appearance in court. The court trying the case of Ram Saran framed two issues only which related to the execution and registration of the mortgage deed of 1892 by Ram Phal Man. A decree was passed in favour of Ram Saran for the amount of the mortgage money, which was to be realized by sale of the hypothecated property. The decree did not declare any charge of the prior mortgage on the property to be sold in execution of the decree of Ram Saran. In execution of the latter decree Inayat-ullah Chaudhri became the purchaser of the property sold.

On the 2nd of August, 1910, Ajudhia Pande and the legal representatives of Guptar Pande deceased instituted a suit in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur to recover the mortgage money due on the mortgage of the 2nd of September, 1890. The claim was brought against the legal representatives of the original mortgagor, Inayat-ullah Chaudhri, the auction purchaser, and some subsequent transferees. The claim was resisted on the ground, among others, that it was barred by res judicata, inasmuch as the prior mortgagees being defendants in the suit of Ram Saran failed to prove the amount of their debt, in consequence of which the relief of Ram Saran regarding the redemption of the prior mortgage could not be allowed.

The court of first instance did not accept this defence and decreed the claim. On appeal the learned Additional Judge of Gorakhpur accepted the plea of res judicata and reversed the decree of the first court and dismissed the claim of the prior mortgagees. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the plea of res judicata barred the claim of the plaintiffs appellants [115] on the authority of the cases:—Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (1). Nattu Krishnama Chariar v. Annangara Chariar (2) and Gopal Lal v. Benarasi Pershad Chowdhry (3).

The case has been argued before us fully and at some length by the learned counsel for both sides and some additional authorities have been cited before us. The cases referred to by the learned Additional Judge and some other cases on the same point go to show that if a prior mortgagee is a defendant in the suit brought by the subsequent mortgagee in which the debt of the prior mortgagee, i.e., the debt prior to the debt in suit is not mentioned and the prior mortgagee omits to set up his claim on his prior mortgage, a subsequent suit would be barred under section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. These cases are no authority for holding that the plea of res judicata applies to the present case. In the case before us the debt of the prior mortgagee was admitted by Ram Saran in his plaint, and in fact he offered to redeem that debt. There was no occasion for the prior mortgagees to come to court and to bring to its notice their prior debt. In fact in two cases, namely, Srinivasa Rao Saheb v. Yamunabhai Ammall (4) and Katchalai Mudali v. Kuppanna Mudali (5), it has been held that under such circumstances the plea of res judicata does not apply. We are therefore of opinion that the claim of the plaintiffs appellants is not barred by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and remand the case to that court for determination according to law. The appellants will get their costs in this Court. Other costs will follow the event.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XXXIV, rule 8—Execution of decree—Decree for sale on a mortgage conditioned on redemption of prior mortgages—Power of court to extend time for payment of redemption money.

When a suit for sale by a subsequent mortgagee became by reason of the intervention of a prior mortgagee also a suit for redemption of the prior mortgage and a decree was passed accordingly, it was held that the court had power under order XXXIV, rule 8, to extend the time for payment of the sum found necessary to redeem the prior mortgage, the plaintiffs having through a bona fide mistake paid into court an insufficient amount.

The facts of this case were, briefly, as follows :—

The plaintiffs, who were subsequent mortgagees, brought a suit for sale upon their mortgage in which they impleaded certain prior mortgagees. The prior mortgagees appeared to answer the suit and claimed to be redeemed, and in the end a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs providing for redemption of the prior mortgages as a condition precedent to the sale of the mortgaged property by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs paid into court within the time limited by the decree what they believed to be a sum sufficient to satisfy it, but, owing to a miscalculation, the sum was as a matter of fact not enough. The court, however, allowed time to the plaintiffs to make good the deficiency. Against this order the prior motgagees appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (with him Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji), for the appellants :—

The plaintiffs having failed to deposit the whole money within the time fixed by the decree their suit stood dismissed. Section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure could not be called in aid as the court had no power to extend the time fixed in the decree for the deposit of the whole amount of mortgage money : Het Singh v. Tika Ram (1).

[TUDBALL, J. :—Section 148 of the Code certainly does not apply, but the proviso to order XXXIV, rule 8, would apply because this was a compound suit involving a sale of the property as well as redemption].

[117] In order to determine whether the rule in question would apply one has to look to the scope of the suit. The rule speaks of a suit for redemption, pure and simple, whereas the present suit was one for sale. The nature of the suit depends upon the relief asked and redemption was not the relief sought in this case. Therefore the rule would not apply. Even assuming that the rule applied, the court was not entitled to extend the time because no good cause was shown for such extension. The decree provided that the money was to be deposited to the credit of defendants 17, 19, 20 and 21. But the respondents deposited the money to the credit of defendant 17 and one Bidhi Chand, who at the date of the suit possessed no interest in the property. The deposit therefore was made in contravention of the express terms of the decree. The principle of the following case applies to the present case as showing that such a deposit is not valid : Debendra Mohan v. Rani Sona Kunwar (1).

The Hon'ble Munshi Gokul Prasad (with the Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal), for the respondents :—

No appeal lay from an order of the lower court granting an extension of time. Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (o) gives a right of appeal from an order refusing to extend the time for the payment of mortgage money. The latter order being expressly provided for as appealable, an order like the one now in question cannot form the subject-matter of an appeal, under the provisions of the Code. The mistake in the deposit was a bona fide one because in the decree it was provided that the money should be deposited to the credit of defendant 17 and Bidhi Chand. The respondents were misled by that provision in the decree.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri, in reply :—

The order passed in the present case is a decree : Rahima v. Nepal Rai (2). According to the appellants' contention the court below had no jurisdiction to extend the time and consequently this Court can deal with the matter in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—This appeal arises out on the following circumstances. The respondents to this appeal brought a suit for sale on the basis of a mortgage. They impleaded [118] certain persons as subsequent transferees. It appears that there were three prior mortgages, one in favour of Bidhi Chand and two in favour of Kalian. Bidhi Chand sold his rights to Kalian and the other three appellants before us. At the trial of the suit these four persons thought fit to stand upon their rights as prior mortgagees and claimed that the plaintiffs should redeem them before they sold the mortgaged property. The result of this was a compound decree in favour of the plaintiffs to the following effect. The court ordered the original mortgagors to pay up the plaintiffs' debt within three months. It then ordered that if they failed so to pay, the plaintiffs should pay within a further period of one month to the present appellants the sums due on the three prior mortgages, and conditional upon their so doing, the decree gave the plaintiffs power to consolidate the amounts due on all the mortgages and to put the property to sale for the full amount. It went on to say that if the plaintiffs failed to pay off the amounts due on the prior mortgages within the time allowed, the suit should stand dismissed. The original mortgagors failed to pay the money within the time allowed. Therefore the plaintiffs within a further time of one month deposited Rs. 3,690-0-0, stating in their application depositing the money that the amount is due to Bidhi Chand and Kalian. The money was really payable to Kalian and the other three appellants, who had acquired the rights of Bidhi Chand. The sum which ought to have been deposited by the decree-holders really amounted to something over Rs. 4,000-0-0. There had been an error in calculation and therefore after the period of one month Kalian and his co-appellants put in a petition of objection in which they pointed out that the amount deposited was not the full amount and therefore the plaintiff's claim under the terms of the decree should be dismissed. They made no mention of the error in entering Bidhi Chand's name in the application. The decree-holders in reply pleaded that the deficiency in deposit was due to miscalculation. They also pointed out the error in entering Bidhi Chand's name and asked for further extension of time to make good the deficiency. The court allowed the application. Hence the present appeal.

The argument of the appellants is that the court had no power whatever to extend the time ; that section 148 of the Code of Civil [119] Procedure does not cover the case in which a time is fixed by the decree for the doing of some act mentioned in the decree, and that order XXXIV, rule 8, would not cover the case as the suit was not one for redemption. On behalf of the respondents it is contended that the order being an order extending time, no appeal whatsoever lies, as order XLIII, rule 1, clause (o), only grants appeals when the court refuses to extend time. The reply to this is two-fold, first that the order granting time is a decree within the meaning of section 47 of the Code, and secondly, that even if it be not a decree, the order passed is without jurisdiction and the court has power to set it aside in revision. In our opinion the order passed by the lower court was with jurisdiction and was justified by order XXXIV, rule 8. It is true that in its inception the suit was not a suit for redemption. It was a suit for sale, but directly the present appellants determined to stand upon their prior rights and demanded redemption, the suit became a compound suit and as a matter of fact the decree was both for sale and redemption, and so far as the decree between the present parties is concerned, it is clearly and simply a decree for redemption. In our opinion the proviso to rule 8 of order XXXIV, clearly applies and the lower court had power to pass the order. So far as the merits of the case are concerned we think the order of the court below is correct. The objection taken by the present appellant was simply as to the amount and the court below was satisfied that there was a bona fide mistake in calculation. As to the entry of Bidhi Chand's name the error was pointed out by the plaintiffs themselves. The lower court's order has done material justice. We see no reason to interfere and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Execution of decree—Stay of execution of decree under appeal—Jurisdiction—Procedure.

Held that the court which passed a decree has no power to stay execution thereof whilst the decree is under appeal; neither has a court which has executed [120] its own decree awarding possession of immovable property power to restore to possession the party whom it has ejected.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

The plaintiffs obtained a decree against the defendants for possession of a house and for mesne profits on the 26th of January, 1912. In that decree the defendants were allowed one month's time within which to vacate the premises in dispute. The decree-holders applied for execution of their decree for possession, for costs and the mesne profits, on the 11th of April, 1912. and on the 23rd of April, 1912, obtained possession of the house through the court amin and got some movable property of the judgment-debtors attached. In the meantime the judgment-debtors had filed an appeal against the decree in the High Court on the 20th of April, 1912, and without applying for an order for the stay of execution in that Court put in an application on the 24th of April, 1912, in the court which passed the decree, praying for the restoration of possession to them pending the decision of the appeal in the High Court. On the 25th of April, 1912, the Subordinate Judge ordered restoration of possession to the judgment-debtor and accepted Rs. 2,500 as security from them. The decree-holders appealed.

Babu Hurendra Krishna Mukerji (with him Babu Jogindra Nath Chaudhri and Babu Amulya Chandra Mitra), for the appellants:—

The order of the lower court is illegal and without jurisdiction on several grounds. An appeal having been filed against the decree, the court which passed the decree had no power to stay execution or restore possession to the judgment-debtors after having once given possession to the decree-holders. The only court where such an application could then be made was the appellate court which had seisin of the suit and no other: Chunni Lal v. Anant Ram (1). Moreover, there can be an application for stay of execution, only where there is something to stay and not where a decree has been executed: Dharram Singh v. Kishen Singh (2). In the present case, possession having been given by the court to the decree-holders, there was nothing left to be done so far as that portion of the decree was concerned, and the execution court had become functus officio. The execution of the decree having been [121] completed even the appellate court could not grant a stay order, much less the court whose decree had been appealed against.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh (with Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji and Dr. Surendro Nath Sen), for the respondents:—

The lower court may have been technically wrong in superseding its own order passed on a previous occasion. But that court having taken security from the judgment-debtors this Court should not interfere. In any case justice will surely be done if this Court simply upsets the order of the court below which is under appeal without prejudice to the judgment-debtors now applying to obtain a stay order from this Court, which is seised of the matter as the appellate court.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—The circumstances out of which this appeal has arisen are as follows:—The decree-holder, on the 26th of January, 1912, obtained a decree for possession of certain house property together with mesne profits and costs. Under the decree the judgment-debtors were directed to vacate the house within one month, i.e., the judgment-debtors were allowed one month's grace to remove their property. On 11th of April, 1912, the decree-holder applied to execute the decree. He asked to be put in possession of the house by ejectment of the judgment-debtors because the latter had not vacated it. They also asked for attachment and sale of movable property in order to recover the costs and mesne profits. On the 20th of April, 1912, the judgment-debtors filed an appeal against the original decree in this Court. No application was made at the time for stay of execution. On the 23rd of April, 1912, the Amin in the court below gave possession to the decree-holders and duly ejected the judgment-debtors. Moveable property was also attached. On the 24th of April, 1912, the judgment-debtors filed an application stating that they had filed an appeal in the High Court and had also applied to that Court for stay of execution (which was incorrect), and they asked the court executing the decree to postpone the proceedings until the order of the High Court was received. On the 25th of April they made another application to the court below stating that they had filed the appeal, but the decree-holders had in execution dispossessed them and attached their property; that they had money ready as security: and they asked the court to release the property and restore them [122] to possession. The court thereupon ordered the money to be deposited in the treasury as security, released the movable property and passed an order to the Amin to replace the judgment-debtors in possession. Accordingly the decree-holders were dispossessed and the judgment-debtors replaced in possession. It is against this order that the present appeal has been made. In the first place, on filing an appeal against the original decree, if the judgment-debtors wished to secure stay of execution they ought to have applied at once to this Court for that purpose. The lower court had no longer any power to stay execution after the appeal had been filed in this Court. In the next place, the decree having been executed in so far as possession of the house was concerned, that portion of the decree could no longer be stayed, it having been executed. The utmost that the lower court could have done on the 25th of April was to stay its hands and go no further. It had no power whatsoever to go backward, to drive the decree-holders out of possession and replace the judgment-debtors in possession. Its order was clearly passed without jurisdiction and was completely ultra vires. We accept the appeal, set aside the order of the court below and direct that the decree-holders be at once restored to the possession which will be theirs until the decree is set aside. The appellants will have their costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

KAMTA PRASAD (Defendant) v. PANNA LAL (Plaintiff).*

[4th December, 1912.]

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), sections 28, 29, 30 and 34—Exproprietary tenant—Mortgagee from exproprietary tenant holding over after ejectment of mortgagor—Rent not fixed by agreement or by a decree of the Court—Right of zamindar to recover rent.

G and H were zamindars who owned some sir land and an occupancy holding. They executed a usufructuary mortgage of their sir land and occupancy holding in favour of K and the predecessor of J. In execution of a money decree against G and H their zamindari rights were sold and P purchased the same. Subsequently, in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, P got G and H ejected by the Revenue Court. Later on P got K and J the mortgagees also ejected by the Revenue Court. P then brought a suit against K and J for arrears of rent for the period between the ejectment of G and H and their own ejectment.

Held that P. was not entitled to recover the rent in regard to the period of time between the two ejectments as the rent had not been fixed either by agreement between the parties or by a decree of court.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 123=13 I. C. 575=11 A. L. J. 29.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of a single Judge of the Court. The facts of the case are stated in the judgement under appeal, which was as follows:—

"This and the connected appeal No. 343 of 1911 arise out of two suits brought by the respondent Panna Lal for arrears of rent under the following circumstances. Godha and Hamir Singh owned certain zamindari shares to which some sir lands appertained. They had also an occupancy holding in another share of which they were not proprietors. On the 10th of March, 1897, they executed a usufructuary mortgage of their sir and occupancy lands in favour of Kamta Prasad and Malkhan. The rights of Malkhan subsequently vested in Jhandu. In execution of a money decree against Godha and Hamir Singh their zamindari rights were sold by auction and were purchased by the plaintiff Panna Lal. On the 6th of September, 1906, Panna Lal sued Godha and Hamir Singh for arrears of rent of the sir land. Kamta Prasad and Jhandu were not parties to this suit. On the 15th of September, 1906, the claim of Panna Lal was decreed, the defendants Godha and Hamir Singh having filed a confession of judgement. On the 29th of November, 1906, these persons were ejected from the holding. Kamta Prasad, however, continued in possession, and accordingly, on the 25th of August, 1909, Panna Lal sued him and Jhandu in the Revenue Court for ejectment. They set up their mortgage, but the court of first instance held that they were tenants without rights of occupancy and ordered their ejectment. From the order of the court of first instance they appealed first to the Commissioner and afterwards to the District Judge. The [124] latter held that the appeal was time-barred and dismissed it. From the decision of the District Judge, the application for revision, No. 4 of 1912, which has just now been decided, was filed. That application having been dismissed, the order of the District Judge has become final, and necessarily the order of ejectment made by the Assistant Collector on the 12th of March, 1910, has become final. In pursuance of this order Kamta Prasad and Jhandu have been ejected. On the 22nd of March, 1910, Panna Lal brought the two suits out of which this and the connected appeal arise for arrears of rent for the period between the date of the ejectment of Godha and Hamir Singh and that of the ejectment of Kamta Prasad and Jhandu. The claim was decreed by the court of first instance and the decision of that court was affirmed by the lower appellate Court. The first contention in this appeal is that the mortgage of the sir lands included a mortgage of the proprietary rights in those lands and that, therefore, the purchase by the plaintiff was subject to the mortgage in favour of Kamta Prasad and Malkhan and the present suit for arrears of rent could not be brought against the appellant. As to this the terms of the mortgage deed of the 10th of March, 1897, clearly show that what was mortgaged was only the right to cultivate the sir lands and the lands held as an occupancy holding. The proprietary rights in the sir lands were not included in the mortgage. The mortgage deed in specific terms recites that it was a mortgage of the right to cultivate (haq kasht), so that it was a mortgage of the right to cultivate the sir lands. As after the sale of the zamindari, the sir lands ceased to be sir, the mortgage may be deemed to have attached to the expropriatory rights acquired by Godha and Hamir Singh on the sale of the zamindari right. Therefore Kamta Prasad and Jhandu became, as regards the sir, mortgagees of the expropriatary rights. For non-payment of arrears of rent the mortgagor having been ejected, their rights as mortgagees determined with the determination of the expropriatary tenancy. If the mortgagees wished to maintain the expropriatary rights, they ought to have paid the rent payable in respect of the expropriatary holding and they ought to have paid off the amount on the decree passed against the expropriatary tenants. There was no obligation on the landholder to sue the mortgagees. He properly sued his tenants and obtained a decree for rent and for non-payment of the amount of the decree he took out ejectment proceedings and thereby determined the tenancy, so that, as regards the sir lands, the appellant cannot contend that his rights as mortgagee still subsist. As I have said above, the appellant was ejected under the decree passed by the Assistant Collector on the 12th of March, 1910, but during the interval between the determination of the tenancy and the final ejectment of the defendant appellant he remained in possession. He was allowed to continue in possession, and, as the courts below find that his possession must be deemed to have been that of a tenant on the same rent on which Godha and Hamir Singh held the lands, it was not necessary to sue to assess him with rent. As pointed out above, upon the determination of the tenancy the mortgage also determined, and subsequently to such determination the mortgagees must be deemed, as held by the Revenue Court, to have been the plaintiff's tenants. As such tenants they were liable to pay rent, and it is reasonable to infer that their tenancy was one on the understanding that the rent which their mortgagors paid should be paid by them. In my opinion the view taken [125] by the court below is right and this appeal must fail. I, accordingly, dismiss it with costs.

Against this decision an appeal was preferred under section 10 of the Letters Patent.

Munshi Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the appellant.

Munshi Benode Behari, for the respondent.

RICHARDS, C. J., and TUDBALL, J.:—The facts out of which this and the connected appeal No. 51 of 1912, have arisen are set out at length in our judgment in L. P. A. No. 49 of 1912. Those two appeals arise out of the two suits for rent therein mentioned.

We find it impossible to hold that the plaintiff respondent is entitled to recover the rent which he claims in regard to the period of time between the two ejectments. Admittedly no rent was fixed as between the present parties, either by agreement or by decree of court. Section 34 of the Tenancy Act (II of 1901, Local) clear by does not, and was never intended to, apply to the circumstances of the present case. It relates to the case of a person taking possession for the purpose of cultivating as a tenant without the consent of the landholder.

Here the present appellant defendant took possession with the full consent of the landholders Jodha and Hamir Singh in the year 1897. It is true that the latter by operation of law became the exproprietary tenants and have been ejected and that the appellant continued to occupy the land. Section 34 clearly does not apply.

Section 28 of the Act applies to the case of a sub-letting by a tenant before the commencement of the Act or a sub-letting subsequent to the Act in accordance with the provisions thereof. In the present case there was no sub-letting prior to the Act by a tenant and there has been no sub-letting since the Act came into force, in accordance with the provisions thereof. This section, therefore, does not apply.

Where the tenant has sub-let, otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act, section 29 applies. It gives the landholder the option of enforcing or not the covenants between the tenant and sub-tenant. In the present case the plaintiff respondent is not seeking to enforce any such covenant ; nor there was any sub-letting subsequent to the acquisition by Jodha [126] and Hamir Singh of their exproprietary rights, unless we hold that mortgage operated as a sub-lease with effect from the date of the acquisition of exproprietary rights. Section 30 of the Act merely states that the interest of a sub-tenant ceases with the extinction of the interest of the tenant for whom he holds. The plaintiff does not in the present suit seek to enforce the terms of the contract between the appellant and Godha and Hamir. He puts them entirely on one side. Therefore we can find no provision in the law which enables him to enforce, as against the appellant, the contract between himself and the exproprietary tenants.

Unless he is entitled to recover this rent by some provision of the law, in the absence of a contract between the parties or a decree of court, he is not entitled to recover it.

For these reasons we must hold that the suit fails. We allow the appeal. The suit will stand dismissed with costs in all courts.

BHAGWATI PRASAD (Plaintiff) v. BHAGWATI PRASAD AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[10th December, 1912.]

Act (Local) No. III of 1901 (United Provinces Land Revenue Act), sections 111, 112, 233 (k)—Partition—Hindu law—Joint Hindu family—Minor—No necessity for minor to be specially represented in partition proceedings.

Where a partition of the property of a joint Hindu family in which one of the members was a minor was found to have been properly carried out with due regard to the interests of the minor, it was held to be no ground for upsetting the partition, were such a course possible having regard to section 233 (k) of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, that the minor was not represented in the partition proceedings by a formally appointed guardian. In such circumstances a minor member of the family is suitably represented by the managing member or members.

[Ref: 25 I. C. 620.]

THIS was a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff was not bound by certain partition proceedings. The facts are fully set forth in the judgment. Shortly they were as follows:—

The proceedings were instituted by the defendants against the plaintiff and other members of his family. The plaintiff was a minor when those proceedings were instituted. No guardian was formally appointed to represent the plaintiff, but the major [127] members of the family acting for themselves and the plaintiff arrived at an arrangement with the opposite party in accordance with which the partition proceedings were carried out. The plaintiff brought this suit to set aside these proceedings. The court of first instance decreed the suit, but the lower appellate court reversed the decree. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the appellant:—

There was no formal appointment of a guardian for the appellant in the partition proceedings. Therefore the appellant cannot be held bound by the partition carried out by the Revenue Court. The minor might have been a member of a joint Hindu family, the managing member of which was made a party to the proceeding, but that did not make an express provision of the law, namely, that a minor must be represented by a formally appointed guardian in order to bind him, unnecessary and superfluous. As regards the question of the Civil Court's authority to question a partition carried out by a Revenue Court, it should be noted that what was challenged in this case was not the validity of the partition proceedings of the Revenue Court but the mode of distribution of the mahals which involved a question of proprietary title and as such was maintainable in a Civil Court.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with whom Mr. E. A. Howard), for the respondents:—

There may have been some irregularity in not appointing a guardian to the minor in the Revenue Court during the course of the partition proceedings, but there are several circumstances in the present case which bind the minor, in spite of that technical defect. The minor was a member of a joint Hindu family, all the members of which, including the plaintiff appellant, were made parties to the partition proceedings. The interest of the minor was identical with that of the other members; no fraud was practised, nor was there even any allegation of it by the plaintiff, and the interest of the minor did not in any way suffer in carrying out the partition. Under these circumstances there is no doubt that the minor was bound by the partition proceedings. Moreover, a suit to set aside a partition proceeding is not a suit in which a question of proprietary title is raised and does not fall under the provisions of either section 41 or section 112 of the Land Revenue [128] Act and therefore section 233 (k) of that Act will bar such a suit.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru was heard in reply.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ. :—The facts out of which this appeal has arisen are as follows :—

The plaintiff, Bhagwati Prasad, together with his half brothers, Jokhu and Lachman, and his uncles Umrao and Ram Nath, and the widow of his deceased uncle Nandan, constituted a joint Hindu family. The family owned a share in mauza Dibaria Buzurg. The defendants, first party, Bhagwati Prasad No. II, minor, &c., were also co-sharers, and so also were the defendants, third party. These three groups of co-sharers cultivated their seperate sir lands. The defendants, second party, are the plaintiffs' half brothers and uncles and aunt. The first set of defendants applied to the Collector under the Land Revenue Act for partition of their share into a separate mahal. The plaintiff was then a minor, and, as the names of all the members of the family were recorded in the khewat, his name was also recorded therein under the guardianship of his half brother, Lachman. There was no objection to the partition, nor is it denied even now that the parties to the partition were the owners in possession of their recorded shares. In the wajib-ul-arz there was recorded the express wish of the then co-sharers that at the time of partition, if it occurred in the future, the various co-sharers should be maintained in possession of the various lands which they then held. This is also in accordance with the provisions of the Land Revenue Act and it is a rule regularly followed in all partitions unless it is not possible to divide the mahal fairly and justly between the co-sharers, in which case the rule has perforce to be broken. Provision is made for this in the Act. In the partition proceeding there was an entry to the effect that the rule was to be followed. But apparently the defendants, first party, and the plaintiffs' brothers and uncles came to an agreement out of court and threw their sir lands into the hotchpot and the whole mahal was divided into shares. Fraud, collusion and dishonesty were alleged by the plaintiff in the present suit, against both his own relations and the first set of defendants, but he has utterly failed to prove these allegations, and the courts below have held against him on this point and it is not now put forward. It may [129] therefore be taken for granted that the partition was justly and fairly carried out, and it was completed and sanctioned by the Collector on the 30th of September, 1908. The plaintiff at that time, though a minor, was not far from his majority, for he instituted the present suit on 27th May, 1910, as being major and of full age. He attained his majority in fact on November 25th, 1908 (vide his plaint). In the course of the partition many plots of land which he and his family cultivated as sir, were placed in the mahal of the first defendants. In the course of the partition case the Revenue Court omitted to make any formal appointment of a guardian ad litem for the present plaintiff. The application for partition was made on the 19th of February, 1908. On the 2nd of April a petition was filed by the plaintiff's brothers and uncles to the effect that they had no objection. It was not signed by Lachman, but by Jokhu on his behalf and the plaintiff's name was omitted. On the 2nd of July, 1908, the agreement mentioned above was written and it was filed on the 3rd of July, 1908, and with it a mukhtarnamah signed with Lachman's name. Plaintiff's name was entered in this application (or agreement). Jokhu again appears to have signed for Lachman. On the same day Jokhu filed an application that the plaintiff was a co-sharer and his share should be entered in Lachman's patti. His name was then entered in all papers from which it had been omitted. After the partition lots had been drawn up the family apparently concluded that it was a mistake not to retain their sir plots in their own shares. Accordingly Umrao and Ramnath, the two uncles, and Jokhu filed a petition of objection on the 31st of August, 1908. This was disallowed. Thereupon Lachman and others appealed to the Commissioner and this was also disallowed. The partition was completed.

The present suit was brought by the plaintiff alleging—

(1) Fraud and dishonesty on the part of his own brothers and uncles with intent to ruin his interests.

(2) That though Lachman was nominated as a guardian ad litem the court did not formally appoint him.

(3) That he was unfit to ac as guardian and not entitled to the post as the minor's mother was alive.

(4) That be did not, as a matter of fact, look after the minor's interests.

[130] (5) That the Revenue Court did not grant any sanction to the agreement in regard to the mode of partition of the lands and that the said partition had been detrimental to the minor's interests.

On these allegations he asked for a declaration that the partition was unlawful and void and that defendants, first party, had no right or share in the five anna, four pie share of the family and those plots of land which had been the sir and khudkasht of plaintiffs' family and which had been allotted to them (the defendants). In the alternative he asked to be put into possession of those specific plots. The court of first instance held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit in respect only to his own share and granted a declaration that the partition was not binding on him and that the defendants, first party, were not entitled to the possession of the plots (of sir and khudkasht) in dispute belonging to the plaintiff's share. It was further declared that the decree did not affect the rights of the defendants, first party, regarding so much of the lands in dispute as appertained to the share of the defendant, second party. This decree clearly was one which, if it were to have any effect, would really upset the whole partition. It did not even make the plaintiff restore to the other party those lands which he received in lieu of his sir and khudkasht plots in dispute. On appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit in toto. He was of opinion that the managing members of the joint family were parties to the partition, and as there was no fraud or collusion proved all members of the family were bound by it and could not go behind it, and that the present suit was one brought at their instigation to get behind the partition and to attain the object which they failed to attain in the Revenue Court by their objections and appeal. The plaintiff appeals.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
35 A. 126=11 A. L. J. 76=17 I. C. 846.

In the beginning we have to point out—

(1) that no fraud has been established;

(2) that it has nowhere been shown that the partition has been made to the detriment of the plaintiff or that he has not received his fair share of the parent mahal;

(3) that his objection to it is directed not to a question of proprietary title but merely to the mode in which the lands have been distributed;

[131] (4) That the Revenue Court is not in any way subordinate to the Civil Court in respect to the mode of distribution of the land.

The suit must fail. Firstly section 233, clause (k), of the Land Revenue Act clearly states that no person shall institute any suit or other proceeding in the Civil Court with respect to the partition of mahals except as provided in sections 111 and 112 of the Act. The present suit does not fall under either of these two latter sections. Of course a person who was no party to a partition proceeding in the Revenue Court could hardly be held to be bound by such a partition, but the Civil Court, while giving him relief in such a case, could not go behind the partition and redistribute the land. It would have to take the new mahals as they were and give the plaintiff adequate relief. The plaintiff's case is that by reason of the omission of the Revenue Court to formally appoint a guardian he was really no party to the partition, and that, even if this formal defect be not fatal to the partition, his brother, Lachman, was unfit for the post and did not look after his interests and ought not to have been appointed in the presence of the plaintiff's mother. But whatever might otherwise have been the result of the Revenue Court's irregularity, there is in the present case a circumstance which is fatal to the plaintiff's case. His family was a joint family, i. e., one legal entity and it was duly represented by the adult male members. The whole body of adult members was made a party to the proceeding. Their interests and the minor's interests were one and the same. There was no fraud, and nothing has been put before the Court to show that the interests of the family or the minor have in any way suffered. There has, therefore, been a partition fairly carried out between the family on one side and the other defendants on the other. The minor was duly represented either by Lachman or the managing member or members of the family. In regard to Lachman the plaintiff in his evidence stated:—"Lachman was master and did all my business after my father's death." We are therefore of opinion that, even though no guardian was formally appointed for the plaintiff in the Revenue Court, he was duly represented, and a partition fairly and honestly obtained against the managing members of the family is binding on him. We would note here that we allowed the plaintiff an [132] opportunity of taking the matter of the partition on review to the Board of Revenue, the highest court of appeal and revision on the revenue side, so that any injustice might, if it existed, be set right. The Board has rejected his application and nothing has been shown to us which goes to prove that the partition was other than just and equitable.

In the circumstances, therefore, we hold that the suit was properly dismissed. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RALLI BROTHERS (Applicants) v. AMBIKA PRASAD (Opposite party).*

[13th December, 1912.]

Master and servant—Clerk engaged on a monthly salary—Relinquishment of employment without consent of master—Clerk not entitled to salary for broken portion of month in which he left his service.

Held that an office clerk engaged on a monthly salary is not entitled to any salary for the broken portion of a month in the course of which he leaves his service without the consent of his employer. Ridgeway v. Hungerford Market Company (1). Dhumee Behara v. Sevenoaks (2) and Ramji Manor v. Little (3) referred to.

ONE Ambika Prasad was a clerk in the service of Messrs. Ralli Brothers on a monthly salary of Rs. 50. He left his service in the middle of a month without the consent of his employers and thereafter sued the firm to recover his salary for the broken portion of the month in which he left. The court of Small Causes at Cawnpore gave him a decree. Messrs. Ralli Brothers thereupon applied in revision to the High Court.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the applicants.

The opposite party was not represented.

TUDBALL, J :—The opposite party to this application was a clerk in the employment of Ralli Brothers on a monthly salary of Rs. 50 per month. He left his service in the middle of the month without the consent of his employers, and he then brought the suit out of which this application has arisen to recover the salary for the broken portion of the month. He gave no previous [133] notice of his intention to resign. The lower court has held that, as he is an office clerk and not a menial servant, the rule as to notice does not apply, and therefore he is entitled to recover the salary claimed. The question is one between master and servant. The plaintiff was engaged on a monthly salary, and he would therefore have been, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, entitled to one month's notice before dismissal. Equally his master was entitled to one month's notice before he left service. The lower court is of opinion that this rule applies only to menial servants. This opinion is by no means correct, and has probably arisen because cases of this description usually arise in regard to menial servants. The English cases on the subject are to be found in Smith's Law of Master and Servant, 5th edition, beginning at page 182. The case of Ridgeway v. Hungerford Market Company (1) is the case of a clerk of a public company whose salary was paid quarterly and who was discharged for improper conduct. The judgement in that case runs as folllows :—"Turner v. Robinson, and many other cases have shown that if a party hired for a certain time so conducts himself that he cannot give the consideration for his salary, he shall forfeit the current salary even for the time during which he has served." See also Dhumee Behara v. Sevenoaks (2) and Ramji Manor v. Little (3). The same principle applies when the servant refuses to work in the course of one of the periods

ATMA RAM AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. UGRA SEN AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[16th December, 1912]

Act No. XVI of 1908 (Indian Registration Act), section 32—Registration—"Presentation"—Physical delivery of document by person not authorized to "present" but executant present and assenting while registration was going on.

Where it is shown that, prior to the registration of the document by the duly authorized official, a person who is competent to present the document for registration was present before that official assenting to the registration, the requirements of the Registration Act are sufficiently complied with.

Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim (1) and Karta Kishan v. Har Narain (2) referred to.

IN this case the plaintiffs' suit had been dismissed by the court of first instance upon the ground that the documents upon which it was based had not been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1908. The facts relating to the registration of the documents in question were these. The documents were brought to the Sub-Registrar by persons who were not duly authorized to present them for registration. But on the same date, and possibly at the same time, the mortgagor himself, who was a person entitled to present them for registration, came to the Sub-Registrar's office and admitted execution, and thereupon the documents were in fact registered. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, for the appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J.:—The only question which has been argued here is whether the documents, the foundation of the present suit, were or were not duly registered. It appears that the documents were brought to the Sub-Registrar by persons who were not duly authorized to present the documents for registration in the manner prescribed by the Registration Act. It, however, also appears that on the same date, is not at the same time, the mortgagor, [135] being a person who was entitled to present the documents for registration, came to the Sub-Registrar's office and admitted execution, and that thereupon the documents were in fact registered. The question is whether or not this amounts to a good presentation within the meaning of the Registration Act. There cannot be the least doubt that the mortgagor was present as an assenting party to the documents being registered. The question involved was very fully argued before a Full Bench of this Court in a recent case. At the conclusion of the arguments, however, the case turned on another point and no decision was actually given. Practically speaking precisely the same questoin arose in Karta Kishan v. Har Narain (1), and a Bench of this Court decided on the 15th day of November, 1912, that registration under circumstances very similar to those of the present case was a good registration. In my opinion where it is shown that prior to the registration of the document by the duly authorized official, a person who was competent to present the document for registration was present before the Sub-Registrar assenting to the registration the Registration Act is sufficiently complied with. I have nothing to add to the views which I expressed in the decision to which I have referred.

TUDBALL, J.—I fully concur. It seems to me quite clear that the present case comes well within the principle which is set forth in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim (2). Their Lordships therein observed :—"When the terms of section 32 are considered with due regard to the nature of registration of deeds, it is clear that the power and jurisdiction of the Registrar only come into play when he is invoked by some person having a direct relation to the deed." In the present case it is perfectly clear that, prior to the registration, the mortgagor, who was a person having a direct relation to the deed, did come forward and invoke the Registrar to exercise his power and jurisdiction, and this action was tantamount to a presentation for registration. I do not think that there is any magic in the mere physical handing over of the document.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the two courts below and remand [136] the case to the court of first instance, through the lower appellate court, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the file and proceed to hear and determine the case on its merits. Costs here and in the courts below will be costs in the cause.

Appeal decreed and cause remanded.

Act No. XLV of 1860 (Indian Penal Code), section 188—Order duly promulgated by public servant—Order forbidding persons to enter railway premises except for travelling.

Held that the public have a right to enter upon railway premises for many purposes other than travelling, and an order forbidding persons to enter a railway station except for bona fide purposes of travelling would be an illegal order.

In the particular instance, however, it did not appear that the order in question was issued by any authority which, supposing it to be otherwise legal would have had power to issue it.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

An order was published at Bindhachal railway station on the East Indian Railway for bidding pandas to go on the railway station except for bona fide purposes of travelling. Certain pandas who were found at the station soliciting pilgrims were accordingly charged with an offence under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code for disobedience to this order. They were convicted and sentenced to certain fines.

The Sessions Judge of Mirzapur acting under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure thereupon referred the case to the High Court with the recommendation that the convictions and sentences should be set aside.

Neither the accused nor the Crown were represented.

TUDBALL, J.—Certain persons have been convicted by a Magistrate of an offence under section 188, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to pay certain fines. The case has been referred to this Court by the Sessions Judge with the recommendation that the [137] convictions and sentences be set aside and the fines refunded. As far as it is possible to do so from the record I gather the facts to be more or less as follows:—Some officer or other has published an order forbidding the accused, who are pandas, from going on the railway station at Bindhachal except for bona fide purposes of travelling. The record does not show by whom that order was issued and whether he had power to issue it. There is nothing to show that it was issued to the accused personally: apparently it was generally proclaimed. The record shows that the accused went on to the platform and importuned certain pilgrims. The Magistrate has therefore held them guilty under section 188, Indian Penal Code. That section runs as follows:—

"Whoever knowing that, by an order promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, he is directed to abstain from a certain act, or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management, disobeys such direction, shall, if such disobedience causes or tends to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury, to any person lawfully employed, be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both."

There is nothing on the record to show that any order was promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order. It is true that the case was tried summarily, and in a summary trial the evidence need not be recorded, but the record shows that no evidence whatsoever was taken to prove the order that was promulgated or to prove that the person who issued the order was authorized to issue it. Moreover, if the order be, as described in the opening clause of the judgment, forbidding persons to enter railway quarters except for bona fide purposes of travelling, such an order is far from being legal. The public have a right to go to the railway premises for many other purposes than travelling and orders forbidding persons to enter railway premises except for travelling purposes could not legally be issued. It would indeed defeat many other purposes for which railways are intended. For this reason the order must be set aside.

There are other grounds, as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, on which it is open to this Court to set aside these convictions, but I do not think it necessary to discuss them. It is incumbent on the prosecution to prove the necessary ingredients which go to constitute an offence. Unless the proof is before the court it cannot be said that the offence has been established. [138] I therefore set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that the fines if paid be refunded.

NARAIN DEI (Plaintiff) v. DURGA DEI AND ANOTHER (Defendants.)*

[3rd January, 1913.]

Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 66—Execution of decree—Benami purchase—Claim against certified purchaser, but not by representative of the real purchaser.

The widow of one Bhola Nath purchased a house at a civil court auction sale in the name of her son-in-law Baldeo and incorporated it into another house left by her husband who had died sonless. On her death one of her daughters claimed the house as an heir of her deceased father. The son-in-law in whose name the house was purchased raised the plea that he was the certified auction purchaser and the suit was barred by section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held that as the plaintiff did not claim through the widow, but through the widow's husband, her father, the suit did not come within the purview of section 66 of the Code. Ram Narain v. Mohanian (1) distinguished.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of a single Judge of the Court. The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment under appeal, which was as follows :—

"In order to understand this appeal, it will be better in the beginning to set out, that one Bhola Nath had a wife, named Musammat Sunder Dei. Of these two, were born four ladies, Musammat Narain Dei, Musammat Durga Dei, Musammat Uttam and Musammat Piari. Bhola Nath died leaving his widow, and these four ladies him surviving. Musammat Sunder Dei is now dead, and the dispute relates to property which is said to be the property of Musammat Sundar Dei. It will be well to note also, that the lady, Mussammat Durga Dei, married one Baldeo. In this appeal the parties are Musammat Narain Dei, who was the plaintiff in the court of first instance, Musammat Durga Dei and her husband Baldeo. The property with which this appeal is concerned, is a house situate in muhalla Mandi Said Khan in the city of Agra. This house was put up to sale by the Civil Court at Agra. It was purchased—so the sale certificate sets out—by Baldeo The sale certificate shows that it was sold subject to a lien of Rs. 119-14-0, arising out of a deed, dated the 3rd June, 1891, of which one Ganga Prasad was the holder. Musammat Narain Dei came into court and asked for possession of this property as being part of the property left by Musammat Sundar Dei. After setting out the pedigree, she alleges that Mussammat Sundar Dei, her mother, got possession of all the property left by Bhola Nath, and that in her life-time she purchased the house in dispute, adjoining the house left by [139] Bhola Nath, and included it in one house. The purchase was made, she says, by Musammat Sundar Dei, out of the money which she had inherited, but she adds that the name of Baldeo was entered fictitiously. According to her Musammat Sundar Dei always remained in possession of the property. She puts the cause of action as arising on the 10th of March, 1907. In the written statement the defendants distinctly denied that the house in dispute was purchased by Musammat Sundar Dei; they deny that she was the owner of it, they specifically deny that the property was purchased fictitiously in the name of Baldeo, and that Musammat Sundar Dei was ever in adverse possession of it. The court of first instance holding that Musammat Sundar Dei was in the receipt and enjoyment of the rent of the house in dispute up to the date of her death, and that Baldeo had no right after her death—the date of wrongful possession as against the legal heirs of Musammat Sundar Dei—decreed the plaintiff's claim for possession of a one-third share in the house in dispute, and directed that it should be partitioned. In appeal, the lower appellate Court held that section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 barred this suit. It held that Baldeo was the purchaser certified by the court, and in consequence decreed the appeal which had been brought by Baldeo and Durga Dei and modified the decree of the court of first instance, directing that the suit for possession by partition of the house in Mandi Said Khan be dismissed together with mesne profits for the same. Musammat Narain Dei comes here in appeal and contends, first that section 66 of Act V of 1908 has no application; secondly, that the plea was for the first time raised in appeal, and the lower appellate Court should not have entertained it. There is a third plea by which it is contended that the whole of the house in muhalla Mandi Said Khan was not purchased by a sale of the Civil Court, that only one-third of it was so purchased and the remaining two-thirds were the result of a private purchase. The fourth plea raised is one regarding the mesne profits of the house.

"To take plea No. 2 first, the question raised is a question of law. The shadow of it had certainly been cast in the pleadings and I think, the lower appellate Court was fully justified in considering the plea. There remains the question how far section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, is or is not, a bar to the suit as brought. The contention of the appellant, as I understand it, is that this is a suit by an heir claiming inheritance to the property left by Musammat Sundar Dei, that section 66—if it applies at all—allows a suit of this kind to be brought under the second clause of the same section. The contention was that when Musammat Sundar Dei purchased the property in the name of Bhola Nath, the appellant, as her reversioner, could have brought a suit to challenge this act, and she is within her rights in so doing after Musammat Sundar Dei's death. The plea raised is a very ingenious one, but it does not seem to me to be strong enough to take it out of the clear words of section 66. The first clause of section 66 is practically the same as the old section 317, clause (1). That clause has been the subject of several rulings by this Court, one of them being a Full Bench ruling. The words used in section 317 were the subject of careful consideration by five Judges of this Court, and they arrived unanimously at the conclusion that this section was intended to preclude the institution of a suit against the certified purchaser, [1140] by the beneficial owner or the successor in title of the beneficial owner. In the present case, the beneficial owner is said to have been Musammat Sundar Dei. The appellant, if she has any standing, is a successor in title of the beneficial owner, and unless the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 has introduced any change, the ruling of this court holds that she, the appellant, is precluded from instituting a suit against Baldeo. But it is contended that the second clause of section 66 enables the suit to be brought. There is no doubt that Act V of 1908 has introduced new words which did not exist in the second clause of old section 317. So far, I am with the learned counsel for the appellant, but I confess considerable difficulty in following him, as he applies the new words to the present case. Is this a case in which a third person is claiming to proceed against property sold ostensively to a certified purchaser for a benamidar on the ground that he is liable to satisfy a claim of the third person against the real owner? Take it that the real owner was Musammat Sundar Dei. What claim has Musammat Narain Dei against Musammat Sundar Dei which gives her a right to proceed against this property though ostensively sold to Baldeo? It is to meet this, that her position as reversioner is put forward. It seems to me that it would require a great deal of twisting to make these words fit in with the claim as now brought. My attention was directed to the case of Achhaibar Dube v. Tapsi Dube (1). In that case, the finding of this Court was that the purchase was not a purchase made secretly by one person for another, the ostensible purchaser having no interest in the purchase, and the real purchaser wishing for some reason that his name should not appear. In other words, the finding of the Court was, that it was not benami purchase. In the present case, however, the contention, right through, of the appellant—as the lower appellate Court points out—has been, that Baldeo was a benami purchaser for Musammat Sundar Dei and with her knowledge. An attempt was made to bring the present case within the purview of two rulings of the Madras High Court—Monappa v. Surappa (2) and Sankunni Nayar v. Narayanan Nambudri (3), and the contention was that section 66 applies not to purchases made by an agent and does not apply when possession has been transferred. Neither of these views have, at any time, so far as I know, found favour with this Court.

"There remains the third plea, viz., to the effect that one-third of the house in dispute was the purchase made at the auction held by the Civil Court and two-thirds were the subject of a private purchase. The purchase is one of a nature similar to that which is made, times out of number, in Civil Court sales. I have been referred to no authority which held that under the circumstances of this kind, namely, where property is sold subject to a lien, the purchaser purchased one fraction at the Civil Court sale and the remaining fraction when he paid off the lien. What the purchaser purchased is the whole of the property subject to any demands that may be made by the [141] RICHARDS, C.J., and BANERJI, J.:—The facts out of which this Letters Patent appeal arises are very clearly stated in the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court. The judgment is reported in 10 A. L. J. R. 97. The suit is to recover, amongst other things, a share in a house by partition and also for mesne profits. The court of first instance decided in favour of the plaintiff. On first appeal the decision of the court of first instance was reversed so far as the property now in dispute was concerned, on the ground that the claim in respect thereof was barred by the provisions of section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This decision was in due course affirmed by a learned Judge of this Court, and against his decision the present Letters Patent appeal has been preferred.

When the case was before us on a previous occasion we determined that we would consider the evidence in the case without remanding the case and so avoid putting the parties to the expense and delay of referring issues. We granted time to the parties in order that the evidence might be looked into. As a result we are able to consider the present case upon a state of facts which have to be admitted. The house in question was purchased by one Musammat Sundar Dei, the widow of one Bhola Nath. This house was subsequently incorporated into another one which admittedly belonged to Bhola Nath and formed part of his estate. It is quite clear therefore that it was the intention of his widow that this house should be part of her husband's estate and should not remain her separate property. Dr. Tej Bahadur has further to admit that he cannot contend on the evidence that the house was not in fact purchased on behalf of the widow, though the purchase was made in the name of Baldeo. We are also satisfied upon the evidence that Musammat Sundar Dei remained in possession of the house up to the time of her death, and that during her life-time Baldeo never pretended that the property was his, or that the auction purchase had been made in reality for his benefit.

The only question therefore for decision in the case is a purely legal one, namely, whether under the circumstances of the present case section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure prevents the present suit being brought. It is no doubt a suit against a certified auction purchaser, and so far it is within the words of section 66. However, it is contended by the appellant that the plaintiff does not [142] claim through Musammat Sundar Dei, but through her own father Bhola Nath; that consequently the suit is not a suit brought on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of any one through whom she claims, and that therefore the suit is not barred by the provisions of section 66. In our opinion this plea is well founded. The learned Judge of this Court refers in his judgment to the Full Bench case of Ram Narain v. Mohanian (1). In that case one Ram Sahai had represented himself to be the owner of certain property. It turned out that he had no title to part of the property at the date of the mortgage. Subsequently, however, that part of the property to which he had no title was put up to sale in execution of a simple money decree against the real owner and purchased in the name of Musammat Mohanian, the wife of Ram Sahai. The plaintiffs in the suit, who were the mortgagees of Ram Sahai, claimed that the purchase of Mohanian was benami for Ram Sahai and that under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act any estate which Ram Sahai subsequently acquired in the property which purported to mortgage became subject to the mortgage. It was held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain the suit having regard to the analogous section 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. Referring to the case the learned Judge of this Court, says :—" The words used in section 317 were the subject of careful consideration by five judges of this Court, and they arrived unanimously at the conclusion that this section was intended to preclude the institution of a suit against the certified purchaser by the beneficial owner or the successor in title of the beneficial owner". We do not think that the decision in the Full Bench case justified these remarks of the learned Judge of this Court. True it is that the learned Chief Justice says in his judgment (at page 87) :—" It appears to me clear that the section was intended to preclude the institution of a suit against a certified purchaser by the beneficial owner or the successors in title of the beneficial owner." It is quite clear when the learned Chief Justice uses the words "successors in title" he was referring to a claim which was being made by a person who derived title from the alleged beneficial owner. It is quite clear that the plaintiff mortgagee was claiming directly through the [143] mortgagor, whose wife, it was alleged, had purchased the property benami for him. The judgment of two of the members of the Court in the most express language decided the case upon the ground that the plaintiff was claiming through Ram Sahai, and that inasmuch as Ram Sahai could not have maintained the suit against Mohanian, the persons who claimed through him had no better right to do so. We think that under the circumstances of the present case the plaintiff's claim is as heir of her father Bhola Nath, that she is not claiming in any way through her mother Musammat Sundar Dei and that therefore her suit does not come within the provisions of section 66. The facts being as already stated, she, in our opinion, was entitled to recover possession by partition of the property in dispute and was also entitled to mesne profits as held by the court of first instance.

(1) (1903) I. L. D. 26 All. 82.

We therefore allow the appeal, set aside the decree of this Court and also of the lower appellate court and restore the decree of the court of first instance with costs in all courts.

Appeal allowed.

TUDBALL, J.—In this case one Muhammad Ali made a complaint against the present applicant, Chhedi, charging him with the offence of cheating, under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code. He had prior to that preferred a complaint under Act XIII of 1859, but had withdrawn that complaint and preferred a complaint of cheating. The Magistrate issued process to Chhedi; a date was fixed; evidence of the prosecution witnesses was taken, and then a further date was fixed for their cross-examination. There were a few postponements and the cross-examination did not take place. Then, suddenly, without examining the accused or framing any charge against him or taking any defence, and relying on the statements in chief of the prosecution witnesses, the Magistrate passed an order purporting to be under Act XIII of 1859, to the effect that Chhedi was either at once to repay the advance of Rs. 60 or give security for Rs. 60 with one surety that he would make two pairs of boots every week for Muhammad Ali: in default of carrying out one of the two orders already mentioned, he was to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months. Chhedi was sent to jail. The case has been referred to this Court by the learned Sessions Judge with the recommendation that the order be set aside. Further comment is unnecessary. The Magistrate has acted quite illegally. There was no case under Act XIII of 1859 before the Magistrate. That Act can only be put in motion by the employer. I set aside the order of the Magistrate and direct that the complaint of Muhammad Ali be heard de novo by some other Magistrate to whom the District Magistrate may think fit to transfer it and not by the Magistrate whose order has just been set aside.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of a single Judge of the Court. The facts of the case are stated in the judgment under appeal, which was as follows:—

"These appeals arise out of a suit brought by the respondent for the ejectment of the appellants from a plot of land in the city of Agra. The case stated in the plaint was that the six defendants were tenants of the land, paying three annas a month as rent, that for five years preceding the suit the defendants had paid no rent, though they had been repeatedly required to do so, and that they had forfeited their lease by non-payment of the rent. There were other allegations regarding constructions on the land with which we are not now concerned. The defendants filed their written statements in June, 1910. In September, 1910, the plaintiffs applied to the court for permission to amend their plaint by inserting in it an allegation that two of the defendants had denied the plaintiffs' title to the land. The plaint was amended and the defendants were given an opportunity of filing a fresh written statement. They then denied that they had forfeited their lease either by non-payment of rent or by denying the plaintiffs' title. They pleaded that they were perpetual lessees of the land, and also that the suit was not maintainable as the plaintiffs had not given them formal notice to quit.

"The Munsif found that the plaintiffs' title in respect of half of the land had been denied by the defendant, Khuda Bakhsh, and he gave the plaintiffs a decree for the ejectment of that defendant and for possession of half of the land. On appeal the Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession of the whole of the land, holding that they had forfeited their lease both by non-payment of rent and also by denial of plaintiffs' title.

"The first question discussed in this Court was, whether the defendants held as perpetual lessees or as tenants from month to month. In the view which I take of the case it is unnecessary to decide this question.

"The next question is, whether the defendants have forfeited their lease by non-payment of rent. It is neither alleged nor proved that it was a [146] condition of the lease that it should be forfeited in case of non-payment of rent. This ground fails.

"The next question is whether the defendants forfeited their lease by reason of their denial of the plaintiffs' title. One of the defendants, Khuda Bakhsh, mortgaged part of a house, expressly including the land. Another defendant, Kadir Bakhsh, mortgaged half the house on the land but did not expressly include the land in the mortgage. In the former case it seems that there was a denial of the plaintiffs' title to the land. In the latter it cannot be said that there was a denial of their title. It has been held that denial of a landlord's title by one of several lessees does not cause a forfeiture of the lease. But I need not discuss this question further, for in my opinion the plaintiffs' suit must be dismissed even if it be proved that the defendants denied the plaintiffs' title. Section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, which admittedly applies to this case, provides that a lease of immoveable property determines in various ways, amongst others, by forfeiture. Clause (g) of the section runs as follows:—'By forfeiture, that is to say, (1) in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that on breach thereof the lessor may re-enter, or the lease shall become void; or (2) in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person, or by claiming title in himself; and in either case the lessor or his transferee does some act showing his intention to determine the lease."

"It is contended on behalf of the defendants that it has neither been alleged nor proved that the lessors did any act showing their intention to determine the lease. On behalf of the plaintiffs it is contended that the institution of the suit was sufficient to show their intention to determine the lease within the meaning of the clause. In the case of Anandamoyee v. Lakhi Chandra Mitra (1) it was held by Ghose and Pargiter, JJ., that in a suit of this kind it must be shown that the plaintiff declared his intention to determine the lease of the defendant and that such intention was declared by some act or otherwise before the institution of the suit. In my opinion that decision was correct. It is contended by Dr. Tej Bahadur that section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act shows that a forfeiture may be completed by the institution of a suit, but it appears to me that section 112 does not show this. The opening words of the section are 'a forfeiture under section 111, clause (g).' The word 'forfeiture' must mean a complete forfeiture and not merely that a tenant has incurred liability to have his lease forfeited. The closing words of clause (g) of section 111 seem to add something to the English law on the subject and were possibly inserted in order that there might be no doubt that an alleged forfeiture must be complete before a suit is brought. The construction adopted by the Calcutta High Court is in accordance with the general rule that a cause of action must be complete at the date of the institution of a suit, and cannot be completed either by the plaint or by the written statement or any other pleading in the suit. I hold that the institution of the suit was not an act showing an intention to determine the lease within the meaning of section 111, clause (g).

"I was asked by the learned advocate for the plaintiffs to follow the course taken by the Calcutta High Court in the case cited, namely to remit an issue to the court below for a finding as to whether an intention to determine the [147] tenancy was declared by the plaintiffs before the institution of the suit. In the present case, I think, I ought not to do so. As already stated, the allegation that a forfeiture had occurred by denial of the landlord's title was not in the plaint when it was filed, but was added several months afterwards. The petition begins with the words 'Daryaft karne se malum hua.' If these words mean anything, they mean that the plaintiffs have come to know of the denial after the institution of the suit. If the plaintiffs were not aware of any act having been committed by the tenants, which rendered the lease liable to be forfeited, they could not have indicated an intention to determine the lease on that account. To frame and remit an issue would, under the circumstances, be an encouragement to the production of false evidence. I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the courts below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs in all three courts. The plaintiffs are at liberty to withdraw the sum deposited in the court below on account of rent. Mr Ghulam Mujtaba states on behalf of his clients that they have no objection to this."

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the appellants.

The denial of the landlord's title took place when the tenant mortgaged the house with the land, and the tenant was, therefore, liable to ejectment. The deed hypothecated the land which the mortgagor said belonged to him, along with the house. The point for decision was whether the filing of the suit was sufficient intimation for determining the lease, within the meaning of section 111 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act. It was submitted that it was. Section 111, clause (g), was to be read with section 112. It was not necessary to do any act other than that of filing a suit to determine the lease. There was a denial of title, and there was nothing to show that there was any act of waiver on the part of the landlord.

Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba, for the respondents, was not called on to reply.

RICHARD, C. J. and BANERJI, J.:—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs sought to recover certain household property situate in the city of Agra. The plaintiffs based their claim on an alleged forfeiture. The acts which the plaintiffs contended constituted a forfeiture were, first, non-payment of rent and secondly, a denial of the plaintiffs' title. So far as non-payment of rent is concerned, the court below has held, and we think rightly, that mere non-payment of rent is not, in itself, sufficient to work a forfeiture of a tenant's interest. The other act was the making of two mortgages. In one of these mortgages the house without the land is mortgaged. In the other mortgage the house as well [148] as the land is mortgaged. The mortgagor states in the mortgage, that he mortgages the house together with the land, which belong to him, without the participation of any other sharers. No further evidence of acts by the lessees denying the plaintiffs' title has been given, nor has it been shown that the lessors, prior to the institution of the suit, did any act showing their intention to determine the tenancy as the result of the alleged denial of their title by the tenants. It may well be doubted whether the mere making of the mortgages, in more or less ambiguous terms, amounted in fact to a denial of the plaintiffs' title at all. They were acts which might very well have been explained by the tenants, had they been allowed an opportunity of doing so. The denial in our opinion ought to be an unequivocal and unambiguous denial of the plaintiffs' title. The learned Judge of this Court, however, accepted the contention that the making of the mortgage, in which the land as well as the house was mortgaged, did amount to a denial of the plaintiffs' title. But he held that the plaintiffs had no right to institute the present suit until they had complied with the provisions of section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that where the lessee has denied his landlord's title the lessor must do some act showing his intention to determine the lease. It was contended at the first hearing in this Court, as also in this present Letters Patent appeal, that the institution of the suit was sufficient compliance with the section. In our opinion the learned Judge of this court was right in holding that the institution of the suit was not a sufficient compliance. In our judgment the act showing the intention to determine the lease must have been done before the suit was instituted. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Held that a suit for a declaration that the defendant, whose name appeared in a certain lease as lessee, had no interest under the lease and that the person really interested in the lease was the plaintiff, was governed as to limitation by article 120 and not by article 91 of the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, the cause of action accruing to the plaintiff when his position as a lessee was challenged.

THIS was a suit asking for a declaration that the first defendant whose name appeared as lessee in a certain lease, had no interest under the lease and that the person really interested in the lease was the plaintiff, for whom the first defendant acted as benamidar. Subordinate Judge is that the suit is one to cancel or set aside an instrument and that time began to run against the appellant more than three years before the suit was brought. On examining the plaint we find that the suit is not one to cancel or set aside an instrument. The appellant has asked for a declaration in effect that the first defendant whose name appears as lessee in a certain lease has no interest under the lease and that the person really interested under the lease is the appellant for whom the first defendant acted as benamidar. It seems to us that the suit is governed by article 120 and that the cause of action accrued to the appellant when his position as a lessee was challenged by the first defendant. We allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the court below and remand the case to that court to be disposed of according to law. Costs in this Court will be costs in the cause.

Act No. IX of 1875 (Indian Majority Act), section 3—Guardian and minor—Effect of appointment of Hindu widow as guardian of her minor sons—Sale of minor's property.

A Hindu died leaving a widow and two minor sons. The widow was appointed in 1890 guardian of the two sons, and in 1891 obtained sanction from the District Judge for the sale of half of the property of the minors. In 1906, the widow and the elder son, who had then attained majority, sold part of the property of the sons amounting to somewhat less than half. Within three years of his coming of age the younger son sued for a declaration that the sale of 1906, and mortgage executed in 1902 were not binding on his interest in the property purporting to be dealt with thereby.

Held (1) that the appointment of the mother as guardian had the effect of prolonging the minority of both sons until they reached the age of twenty-one years; and (2) that the sanction of the Judge given in 1891 could not validate a sale which was not made until 1906. Gharib-ullah v. Khalak Singh (1) distinguished.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

One Udit Narain Chaube died several years ago leaving a widow, Musammat Rukmina, and two sons, Lalji Chaube and Gopal Chaube, respondents to this appeal. Both sons were minors when their father died. Mutation of names seems to have been effected in favour of the widow as well as the two sons. But it is common ground that the two sons only succeeded to the property with which we are now concerned, namely, a five anna four pie share in a village called Koelaswa. In September, 1890, the widow was appointed by the court to be the guardian of her two sons, and in the following year she obtained from the District Judge permission to sell half the share in the village. that permission. On the 10th of February, 1906, the widow and the elder son, Gopal, who had attained majority, sold a two anna, 3 pie, 13½ chitaks share to the appellants for a stated consideration of Rs. 5,774. The younger son, Lalji, alleging that he came of age less than three years before the institution of the suit, sued for a declaration that the sale deed of the 10th of February, 1906, and a mortgage, dated the 1st December, 1902, were not binding on him, and prayed that they may be cancelled and that he might be put [151] in possession of the share which was sold. The court below decreed the claim so far as it relates to the plaintiff's own share, that is, as to half of the property covered by the deed of sale. The purchasers appealed to the High Court.

In September, 1890, the widow was appointed by the court to be the guardian of her two sons, and in the following year she obtained from the District Judge permission to sell half the share in the village, No action seems to have been taken on that permission. On the 10th February, 1906, the widow and the elder son, Gopal, who had attained majority, sold a two anna, 3 pie, 13½ chitaks share to the appellants for a stated consideration of Rs. 5,774. The younger son, Lalji, who alleges that he came of age less than three years before this suit was brought, has sued for a declaration that the sale deed of the 10th of February, 1906, and a mortgage, dated the 1st December, 1902, are not binding on him and he prays that they may be cancelled and that he may be put in possession of the share which was sold. The court below has decreed the claim so far as it relates to the plaintiff's own share, that is, as to half of the property covered by the deed of sale. The purchasers have appealed. The first point taken in appeal is that the suit is barred by limitation for two reasons, namely, that the plaintiff attained majority when he completed his eighteenth year, and, secondly, that, even if the plaintiff attained his majority when he completed his twenty-first year, the present suit was not instituted within three years of the date on which he attained his majority. In support of the first argument we are referred to the [152] decision of the Privy Council in Gharib-ullah v. Khalak Singh (1). In that case, one Chet Singh died leaving three sons, two of whom were minors, and his widow was appointed by the Court to be the guardian of the persons and property of the two minors. Their Lordships held that the interest of a member of a joint family was not individual property at all and that therefore the widow of Chet Singh, though appointed guardian of the minors by the court, had nothing to do with the family property and had no right to join with the eldest son in making a transfer of it. Their Lordships expressly refrained from deciding the question whether the appointment of the widow as guardian of the two minors would have the effect of prolonging their minority. In the present case when Musammat Rukmina was appointed guardian of her sons, both of them were minors. The appointment was therefore not open to the objection considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and we must hold that under section 3 of the Indian Majority Act the sons did not attain majority until they completed their twenty-first year. The result is that the plaintiff Lalji must be held to have attained his majority when he completed his twenty-first year. On the evidence the court below has held that the present suit was instituted within three years of the date on which the plaintiff completed his twenty-first year. We have not been asked to review that evidence. The Subordinate Judge seems to have given good reason for the conclusion at which he has arrived, and we, therefore, agree with him in holding that the suit is not barred by limitation.

The second point taken by the appellants is that the sale to them was made with the sanction of the District Judge. The so called sanction was obtained in September, 1891. The sale deed in question was executed in February, 1906, about fourteen and a half years afterwards. The sanction is referred to in the sale deed as if it authorized the transfer of the property. But it is quite clear that the District Judge in 1891 did not intend to sanction the transfer of the minor's property fifteen years later when the circumstances of the family must have altered considerably. In our opinion the transfer cannot be supported by the sanction given in [153] 1891. We would observe also that this point was not definitely taken in the memorandum of appeal before us.

There remains the question whether the transfer is supported by legal necessity. We were referred to some cases in which the question was considered whether transfers made by a father were binding on his sons. Those cases have no bearing on the present case. If the transfer is to be held valid it must be on the ground that it was made for legal necessity and it was not enough for the appellants to show that part of the consideration was devoted to the discharge of pre-existing debts. Of the stated consideration of Rs. 5,774, a sum of Rs. 3,319-8-0 was left in the hands of appellants for the discharge of a mortgage held by one Doman Bhagat. The plaintiff concedes that that mortgage is binding on him. But it is not suggested that it was necessary to sell the property merely to discharge that mortgage. As a matter of fact the appellants have not yet discharged that mortgage. The remainder of the consideration is made up of several items, each of which was considered separately by the court below. We have not been taken through the evidence regarding these items. But it appears from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that all that was attempted to be proved was that the majority of the various items were previously existing debts. There is no evidence that these debts were incurred for necessity or for the benefit of the family, and there is no evidence that the appellants made any inquiry regarding them or that they were induced to believe and did believe that the debts were incurred for legal necessity. One of the appellants was examined as a witness, and he does not even suggest that he made any inquiry. The result is that the appellants have failed to prove that there was any necessity for the sale of the property. There being no cross appeal by the plaintiff in this case, we are relieved from the necessity of considering whether the sale should have been set aside in its entirety. The decree, so far as it goes, appears to be correct. The appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

EMPEROR v. TULSI RAM AND OTHERS.*

Criminal Procedure Code, sections 35 and 408—Appeal—"Aggregate sentences"—Concurrent sentences not aggregate.

Held that the term "aggregate sentences" as used in sub section (3) of section 35 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies only to consecutive and not to concurrent sentences. Where therefore an Assistant Sessions Judge passes concurrent sentences and the whole term to be served by the convict does not exceed four years, the appeal under section 408 of the Code does not lie to the High Court but to the Sessions Judge. Sher Muhammad v. Emperor of India (1), Emperor v. Tulshidas Lakshman (2) and Ragina v. Gulam Abas (3) approved and followed. Abdul Khalek v. King-Emperor (4) dissented from.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

Tulsi Ram, Chotey Lal and others were convicted by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Aligarh, some of them of offences under sections 304 and 147 and others of offences under sections 325 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code. The persons named above were each sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment under section 304, and one year's rigorous imprisonment under section 147, the two sentences to run concurrently. They filed appeals in the High Court, and at the hearing a preliminary objection was raised that, having regard to sections 35 and 408 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the appeals lay to the Sessions Judge and not to the High Court.

TUDBALL, J:—The appellants in this case were convicted by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Aligarh, some of them of offences under sections 304 and 147 and some of them under sections 325 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code. Of these, two persons, Tulsi Ram and Chotey Lal, were each sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment under section 304 and one year's rigorous imprisonment under section 147, the two sentences to run concurrently. [155] These two have filed their appeals here, and the question arises whether these appeals have been rightly filed in this Court or whether they lay to the court of the Sessions Judge. Section 408 says that when in any case an Assistant Sessions Judge passes any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years, the appeal shall lie to the High Court. This is in clause (b) of the proviso; otherwise under the opening clause of the section an appeal would lie to the Court of Session. It has been urged that under section 35 (3) and section 408 the total of the two sentences passed being five years the appeal lies to this Court. Clause (3) of section 35 lays down that for the purpose of appeal, aggregate sentences passed under the section in case of convictions for several offences at one trial shall be deemed to be a single sentence. It is quite clear to my mind that the words, 'aggregate sentences' and in fact the whole of clause (3), relate to the case of consecutive sentences mentioned in clause (2). The word 'aggregate' implies an adding together of separate items, and where sentences are concurrent there is no such aggregation. As a matter of actual fact the sentences which these two appellants would have to undergo on the decision of the Assistant Sessions Judge are sentences of four years' rigorous imprisonment each, and no more.

My attention has been called to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Abdul Khalek v. King-Emperor (1). The ruling, no doubt, is in the appellant's favour, but the judgment gives no reasons. On the other hand the point was considered in the case of Sher Muhammad v. Emperor of India (2) and it was therein held that where two sentences had to run concurrently there could be no aggregation of sentences, and as there was no sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years the appeal lay to the Sessions Court. That was in the case of a decision by an Additional District Magistrate. The same point was considered in Emperor v. Tulshidas Lakshman (3). The ruling of the Punjab Chief Court and also an old ruling of the Bombay High Court itself, Regina v. Gulam Abas (4), were followed. In my opinion these decisions are perfectly correct and as these two appellants have not been sentenced to imprisonment for terms exceeding four years by the Assistant Sessions Judge, their appeals will [156] lie to the court of the Sessions Judge. I therefore direct that the memorandum of appeal be returned to the appellants to be filed in the proper court. The Sessions Judge will not doubt under the circumstances of the case admit the appeal although they may be out of time when presented to him.

Memorandum of appeal returned.

TUDBALL, J. :—This is an application in revision against the order of the Judges of the Small Cause Court at Allahabad. The plaintiff, who is the applicant here, is a lessee of a ferry from the Cantonment Committee of Allahabad. The defendants are [157] fishermen, who according to the plaintiff, are landing their fish on the river bank where his ferry is situate. He claims that as lessee of the ferry he is entitled to a fixed toll of Rs. 8 per boat. The suit was instituted in the Court of Small Causes at Allahabad, and the Judge of that court has held that he had no jurisdiction, as the suit is one which falls under article 13 of the second schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The plaintiff comes here in revision and urges that the suit is cognizable by the court below. Article 13 contemplates a suit to enforce payment of dues when such dues are payable to a person by reason of his interest in immovable property and the question is whether the plaintiff by reason of his lease of the ferry has an interest in immovable property. The point was considered in two cases, namely, Gokal Chand v. Lal Chand (1) and Desa Singh v. Narain Das (2). The right to a ferry no doubt is a benefit which arises out of land and comes within the definition of immovable property under section 3 (25) of the General Clauses Act. I fully agree with the two above mentioned rulings. In my opinion the order of the court below is perfectly right. I dismiss the application. The costs of this application will abide the result and will be costs in the cause.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the opposite parties.

[158] TUDBALL, J.—This application for revision arises out of the following circumstances:—One Abdul Rahman was a zamindar of plot No. 1381, which is involved in the present suit, He cultivated it as his sir land. On the 11th of May, 1892, he gave a usufructuary mortgage to the predecessors in title of the present defendants. In 1897 Abdul Rahman's proprietary rights were sold in execution of a decree and purchased by Kalyan Mal. Subsequently to this the heirs of Abdul Rahman were recorded in the patwari's papers as exproprietary tenants of that plot. The mortgagees under the deed of the 11th of May, 1892, were recorded as mortgagees of the exproprietary tenure. Kalyan Mal brought a suit against the heirs of Abdul Rahman for the rent of this plot and obtained a decree, and the formality of ejectment was gone through, on the 27th of December, 1910. As a matter of fact the mortgagees remained in possession and were no parties whatever to the proceedings in the Revenue Court taken by Kalyan Mal. The present suit, out of which this application has arisen, was brought against the mortgagees, the predecessors in title of the opposite party, ostensibly under section 58 of the Tenancy Act. The defence of the mortgagees to the suit was that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties and that they were the mortgagees of the proprietary rights. In other words they clearly set up their mortgage, and said that Kalyan Mal was a mortgagor, having acquired the equity of redemption and that they were the mortgagees. The first court dismissed the suit, holding that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties. Kalyan Mal appealed to the Commissioner, who held that a question of proprietary title was involved in the case and that an appeal lay to the District Judge. On the 24th of February, 1912, he returned the appeal for presentation to the proper court. The appeal was presented on the 26th of February, 1912, to the District Judge. An affidavit was filed. The appeal was admitted and then on the 19th of June, the District Judge made the following order:—" Heard pleader. A mortgagee of a right to occupy ex sir land has been ejected, as the exproprietor relinquished, though without redeeming the mortgagee. There is no question of proprietary title, nor was any question of jurisdiction decided in the lower court. No appeal lies here. Returned."

[159] It is perfectly clear that the defendants distinctly claimed a proprietary title, or at least a portion of the bundle of rights which go to make up proprietary title. An appeal did lie to the District Judge. I, therefore, admit the application, set aside the order of the District Judge and direct the Judge to readmit the appeal on its original number and proceed to hear and decide it according to law. I make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XX, rule 18—Partition—Appeal—Preliminary decree—Subsequent interlocutory order giving directions for preparation of final decree.

In a suit for partition a preliminary decree was passed and confirmed on appeal. When the case went back to the court of first instance for the passing of a final decree that court passed an order directing that actual partition should be made in accordance with certain directions then given by it. Held that no appeal would lie against such an order, but its propriety could be questioned in appeal from the final decree. The Code of Civil Procedure contemplated the preparation of only one preliminary decree, and the order in question could not be regarded as more than an interlocutory order containing directions as to the preparation of the final decree.

[Ref. 20 C. L. J. 476=27 I. C. 317 ; 42 Mad. 296=65 I. C. 983=14 L. W. 631=42 M. L. J. 71=30 M. L. T. 83 ;74 I. C. 373=38 C. L. J. 255.]

"This was a suit for partition of certain houses. A preliminary decree was passed dismissing a portion of the claim, but declaring the plaintiff's right to possession by partition of certain specified shares in each of the two houses. This declaration was, however, subject to a condition, viz that a smaller fractional share in each house, that is to say, a portion of the share declared to belong to the plaintiffs, was subject to a charge of Rs. 877-0-0 in favour of the defendant Yakub Husain and directing that the plaintiffs should pay the same before they could obtain possession. That decree was contested up to Letters Patent appeal before the Court, and was substantially affirmed. The plaintiffs then presented to the court of first instance an application to the effect that they had no desire to redeem the fractional shares subject to the charge of Rs. 877, but could be content with actual partition of a smaller share in each house arrived [160] at by deducting the share subject to the charge from the share decreed in their favour in the preliminary decree. The learned Subordinate Judge, on receiving this application, proceeded to frame certain issues. He came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were in effect abandoning a portion of their claim, and that they had a right to do this at any stage of the suit, even after the passing of the preliminary decree. Dealing with the question on this basis, he arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled without making any payment at all, to a share of 73/108 in one house, and of one-third in the other. He ordered separation by actual partition by metes and bounds of the shares thus ascertained from the rest, of each of the houses in question, and a formal order was drawn up which undoubtedly reads like a preliminary decree in a partition suit and fulfils all conditions of such a decree, embodying the declaration and the direction above stated. An appeal against this having been lodged in the court of the District Judge, the learned District Judge has held that the order complained of is not a decree and that no appeal lies against the same. This order is supported before me on behalf of the respondents on the ground that there can not be more than one preliminary decree in a suit for partition, and that the defendant should be content to wait for the passing of a final decree in the suit, when he would be entitled in appeal from such a decree to challenge the correctness of the order now in question. After examining the record it seems to me that this much is certainly clear, viz , that the learned Subordinate Judge concerned himself to the passing a second or supplementary preliminary decree in the suit, as if on an amended plaint. It is a little difficult to discuss the abstract question whether an appeal lies or not, without allowing it to be complicated by the further question whether the order complained of is a good order in law, or one which the learned Subordinate Judge was entitled to pass. I take the defendant's contention to be that the learned Subordinate Judge had no right to do anything beyond correctly interpreting and carrying out the terms of the preliminary decree before him. If the learned Subordinate Judge had dealt with the matter from this point of view, that is to say, that the only question before him was whether the preliminary decree as passed would or would not bear a certain interpretation, an order passed by him on this basis would be a mere interlocutory order only to be challenged by way of appeal from the final decree. The order before me, however, is not of this nature. It seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge dealt with the matter upon a new set of facts which had come into existence since the passing of the preliminary decree which had been appealed to this Court. He considered that the plaintiffs were abandoning a portion of their claim and had a right to take such a step, with or without any formal amendment of the plaint, even after a preliminary decree had been passed. If this view is correct, it necessarily involves the passing of a second preliminary decree on a new set of facts. There is no force in the analogy which was pressed upon me in argument between the present case and that of a plaintiff in a partition suit, who acquires, by inheritance or otherwise, a further share in the property in suit after the preliminary decree has been passed. If, however, the learned Subordinate Judge was mistaken in the point of view from which he regarded the plaintiff's application, and if as a matter of fact nothing could happen which would justify the passing of a second [161] or supplementary decree, then his whole proceedings are open to question because he did not confine himself to merely interpreting the preliminary decree as originally passed, but undoubtedly thought it to be susceptible of modification in view of facts which had subsequently occurred, namely, the abandonment by the plaintiffs of a portion of their claim. To sum up, therefore, my opinion regarding this appeal,' I hold that it is not in itself an impossibility that there should be a second preliminary decree passed in a suit for partition if such second decree is based upon facts or circumstances alleged to have come into existence after the passing of the first preliminary decree I hold that the question whether in the present case any circumstance had or had not occurred since the passing of the first preliminary decree sufficient to justify the passing of a second preliminary decree, is a question which has to do with the merits of the decision now called in appeal and not with the question whether an appeal lies. I hold that the order appealed against is in fact a second preliminary decree in this partition suit and was intended to be a second preliminary decree, and was open to appeal to the District Judge. I therefore set aside the order of the lower appellate court and remand this case to that court under the provisions of order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure, directing it to be re-admitted to the file of pending appeals and dispose it of accordingly. Costs will abide the event."

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (for Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji), for the appellants :—

The respondents should have waited till a final decree was passed. The law only contemplated one preliminary decree. See Code of Civil Procedure, order XX, rule 18. The court could have passed a preliminary decree with directions for further inquiry. Matters could be inquired into with a view to facilitate the preparation of the final decree. The Judge did not make a second preliminary decree. He laid down the lines on which the final decree was to be passed. Any objection could be taken in appeal against the final decree. At this stage no appeal lay. The order passed was not a decree.

Babu Piari Lal Banerji, for the respondents :—

Any directions for preparation of the final decree were in the nature of interlocutory orders ; but the court could not pass an amended decree in substitution of the first preliminary decree. No appeal lay against an interlocutory order ; but this order went beyond that ; for example, if after the preliminary decree one of the defendants dies and the plaintiff claims that his share has been augmented and the court makes an adjudication, could not then he appeal from that order ? It was submitted that he could. If a court reviews its judgment after appeal the order is not a nullity [162] and an appeal lies. A decree was any order declaring the rights of parties and the second order here did so, inconsistently with the first decree.

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J.:—The facts out of which this appeal arises are very shortly as follows:—There was a suit for partition. A preliminary decree was made. Appeals right up to a Letters Patent appeal were taken against that preliminary decree, but without success, and the decree of the court which made the preliminary decree for partition was confirmed. On the case going back to the court of first instance for the passing of a final decree an application was made by the plaintiff in which he asked to be allowed to abandon certain shares to which he had been declared entitled subject to a charge. His case apparently was that he would not press for these shares because they were not worth the charge. He also stated that, having regard to certain events which had happened whilst the appeals were pending, the shares of certain other persons had been acquired by him, and he asked that his share on partition might be augmented accordingly. The court of first instance went into these matters and granted the plaintiff's application and directed that actual partition should be made in accordance with his decision. There was an appeal against this decision to the lower appellate Court. It held that no appeal lay inasmuch as no final decree had as yet been made. An appeal was then preferred to this Court, and a learned Judge of this Court set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court holding that the decision of the court of first instance appealed against was really a second preliminary decree. We think that the decision of the learned Judge of this Court was not correct. The Code of Civil Procedure contemplates one preliminary decree and no more. We do not for a moment suggest that any hardship has been done to the respondent by the decision of the court of first instance. We, however, think that we should state in our judgment, that it must be clearly understood that it will be open to the respondent to challenge the propriety of the decision of the court of first instance, dated the 19th of August, 1911, after a final decree has been made in the matter. That order in our opinion is only to be regarded as an interlocutory order preparatory to the making of a final decree. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this [163] Court and restore that of the lower appellate court. We direct that the costs of all these proceedings shall be costs in the cause.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—The appellant in this case was the defendant in a suit, in the court below, which was decreed ex parte against him. He applied under order IX, rule 13, of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the ex parte decree set aside on the ground that summons had not been served on him and therefore he was unable to appear and defend the suit. The suit was against the appellant and his minor brother Har Bilas as owners of the firm Gulab Chand Har Bilas. Har Bilas was a minor, and when the plaint was filed there was an application by the plaintiff asking the court to appoint Gulab Chand as guardian of the minor. Notice of this application was issued to Gulab Chand. On the 27th of July, 1911, he filed a vakalatnama and objected to his appointment as guardian of the minor. His objection was allowed, and finally on the 1st of September, one Musammat Champo was appointed guardian. On the same day the suit was registered and summons was ordered to issue. Summons was issued to Gulab Chand, but it was returned unserved. Therefore the court passed an order that as there was a vakalatnama on the [164] record it was unnecessary to take any further step. The suit was decided ex parte against Gulab Chand. His application was rejected by the court below on the ground that a vakalatnama, dated the 27th of July, 1911, had been filed and showed that a vakil was appointed to defend the action filed and therefore service of summons was unnecessary after that. It is quite clear that on the 27th of July, 1911, the only matter pending was the miscellaneous matter relating to the appointment of a guardian. The suit was not registered and the pleader was appointed for that miscellaneous matter. It was the duty of the court to serve the summons after the suit had been registered. It is true that Gulab Chand knew that a suit had been instituted, but he was entitled to receive a copy of the plaint and be informed of the date fixed in order that he might be able to protect his rights. Therefore the order of the court below is wrong. We allow the appeal; set aside the ex parte decree as against the present appellant and direct the court below to restore the suit to its original number and proceed to hear and determine it according to law. The costs of this appeal will abide the event.

Held that a document which purported to be a mortgage, but which was attested by only one witness could not operate either as a mortgage or as creating a charge on immovable property within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Ravuthan (1) referred to.

THE plaintiff in this case brought a suit for sale of immovable property on the basis of a document, alleged to be a mortgage, dated the 11th of July, 1900. The document purported to have [165] been executed by a number of persons who were stated to be the adult members of a joint Hindu family. It was in the form of a mortgage but was attested by only one witness, instead of the two witnesses required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. It was argued that nevertheless the document might be construed as creating a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Act. The court of first instance held against the plaintiff on both these points and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal and Munshi Haribans Sahai, for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI and TUDBALL, JJ.:—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale on foot of an alleged mortgage. The document is dated the 11th of July, 1900. It purports to have been executed by a number of persons who are stated to have been the adult members of a joint Hindu family. The present suit is brought against all the members of the family. The court below dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Hence the present appeal.

The appellant has to admit that owing to the fact that the document was attested by one witness only, the deed cannot operate as a mortgage, having regard to the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, which requires that a mortgage must be attested by at least two witnesses. It is, however, contended that the document, assuming it to have been executed by the persons who purported to do so, amounts to a charge under section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act and ought to be given effect to as such. It was further contended that in any event the plaintiff ought to have a personal decree against such persons as in fact executed the document.

The question as to how a mortgage must be attested was recently before their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Ravuthan (1). In that case there were several witnesses to the document, but it appears that these witnesses had signed their names as such merely upon the admission of the executants and had not actually witnessed the signatures of the executants. It was held by the High Court of Madras that [166] such "attestation" did not fulfil the requirements of section 59. On appeal their Lordships of the Privy Council took the same view and confirmed the decision of the Madras High Court. It is contended that their Lordships did not decide the question raised in the present appeal, namely that the document might be good as a charge although it fell short of fulfilling the necessary conditions of a mortgage. We cannot accept this view. The suit in that case was a suit for sale on an alleged mortgage, just as the present; and the present argument could not well have escaped the attention of their Lordships or of the Madras High Court. As a matter of fact we find from the report, at page 610, that it was contended before their Lordships of the Privy Council that the document must operate as a charge. We must take it that their Lordships considered and repelled the contention that a charge was created. We deem ourselves bound by the ruling of their Lordships in the case to which we have referred.

As to the other point we must point out in the first instance that the suit was not a suit for a personal decree. It was a suit to enforce payment of moneys alleged to be secured by mortgage by sale of the mortgaged property. Furthermore we find in the document itself the following clauses :—" In case of breach of the condition laid down in this document the said Babu Sahib shall have power to realize the entire amount mentioned in this document together with interest at the said rate from the hypothecated properties. The said Babu Sahib shall have no power to realize it from the persons and pay, et cetera, of us, the executants."

It is true that in the earlier part of the deed there are provisions that upon failure to pay certain instalments the mortgagee shall have power to realize the entire amount from the property hypothecated and also from " other moveable and immoveable properties." These are ordinary clauses which find their way into a great number of mortgages in these provinces. But, reading the document as a whole, we think that it was the intention of the parties that the mortgagee should rely upon his remedy against the mortgaged property and not against the person of the mortgagors. There is certainly no provision that a personal decree should be obtained. Under these [167] circumstances we consider that the decision of the court below was correct and ought to be confirmed.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with one set of costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Held that section 31 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, cannot be construed as reviving rights already time-barred under the Limitation Act of 1871.

THIS was a suit for sale on a mortgage, dated the 19th of July, 1863. The money secured by the mortgage became payable on the 19th of June, 1864, and the suit was instituted on the 6th of August, 1910. became payable on the 19th of June, 1864. The present suit was instituted on the 6th of August, 1910. The court below has dismissed the suit as being barred by time. In our opinion this view was correct. Under the Limitation Act of 1871, which governed the present mortgage, a suit could only be brought within twelve years of the time the money became due, that is to say, within twelve years from the 19th of June, 1864. That Act contained no provision similar to article 147 of Act XV of 1877. It is, therefore, quite clear that before the passing of the last mentioned Act the claim under the bond in suit was barred by limitation. It is manifest from the provisions of section 2 of the [168] Act of 1877 that no right which had become barred under the Act of 1871, was thereby revived. No doubt for some time, this High Court considered that a suit might be instituted in respect of mortgages, which were governed by the Act of 1877, at any time within sixty years, but their Lordships of the Privy Council have considered this view erroneous—see Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai (1). This last mentioned decision, and the hardship which was supposed to follow in consequence, led to the introduction of section 31 of the present Act, which provides that, notwithstanding anything contained in it, or in the Limitation Act of 1877, a suit for sale may be instituted within two years from the date of its passing or within sixty years from the date when the money secured by the mortgage becomes due, whichever period expires first. The appellant relies upon this section, and contends that it is clear from the mention of sixty years that it was intended to apply to cases like the present, even though they were already barred by the provisions of the Act of 1871. We cannot agree with this contention. It is impossible to hold that by the introduction of this section the Legislature intended to revive rights which had already become long since barred under the Act of 1871. The section expressly refers only to the provisions of Act XV of 1877 and not to any earlier Act. It is quite clear that if the plaintiff had instituted the suit whilst Act XV of 1877 was still in force it would have been time-barred. The enactment of section 31 certainly can give him no higher title. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J:—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claims damages for breach of covenants for title contained in a sale deed, dated the 12th of October, 1889. The court below has given the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 2,900, being considerably less than the amount claimed. At the time of the alleged sale the property mentioned in the plaint, together with other property was in the hands of the Court of Wards, and the sale deed was executed by the Court of Wards. It has not been contended, and in our opinion could not be contended, that the persons entitled to the property sold were not liable upon foot of the covenants given by the Court of Wards, assuming that there was a breach. The sale deed contained the ordinary covenants for title, including a covenant that the vendors took upon themselves "the responsibility that the property should be free from all debts, claims and liabilities".

In the present suit we are concerned with a village called Mirpur Harriapur, which was one of the items of property comprised in the deed already mentioned. The title to this village briefly is as follows:—One Jaswant Singh and others were the owners of it. Jaswant Singh mortgaged it to Brij Kishore, who brought a suit for sale and obtained a decree. Brij Kishore then died and his widow Durga Dei continued the proceedings, had the property sold, and purchased it herself. On the 9th of December, 1879, Durga Dei sold it to Durga Kunwar. Durga Kunwar was the widow of Lakhan Singh, who had a brother, Har Singh, and it is admitted that the two brothers were joint. Some time after the sale by the Court of Wards claims were made to the property, the subject-matter of the sale. The claimants [170] alleged that they were the reversioners to the estate of Brij Kishore; that Durga Dei as his widow, in the absence of legal necessity, had no power or authority to sell property to Durga Kunwar, and that upon Durga Dei's death, which took place on the 8th of June, 1905, they became entitled to the property.

It is an admitted fact that a considerable amount of litigation took place with respect to the claim so made, with the result that in respect of one of the villages sold by Durga Dei, the claim of one Kishan Chand, one of the claimants, was decreed. We mention this to show that there was a serious claim made against the vendees under the sale deed of the Court of Wards. In due course a claim was made against Kali Charan, the purchaser from the Court of Wards, in respect of the village Mirpur Harriapur. The plaintiff at once sent notice to Durga Kunwar, setting forth clearly and distinctly the nature of the claim that had been made, called attention to the success of Kishan Chand in the other litigation, and required Durga Kunwar to give such information as would enable Kali Charan to defend the suit which he anticipated would be brought against him. No attention of any kind was paid to this notice. Subsequently Kali Charan compromised with the claimants and paid to Kishan Chand a sum of Rs. 4,750.

He gave notice of this compromise to Durga Kunwar, but again no notice was taken and then the present suit was instituted.

We are quite satisfied that the compromise was a genuine compromise. We are also quite satisfied that the two notices, although addressed to Durga Kunwar alone, reached all the defendants, who constituted a joint Hindu family. In the written statement, which was put in by Gajraj Singh, Mahtab Singh and Musammat Dharam Kunwar, it is not disputed that the notice was sent.

Two main points have been argued in the present appeal. It was first contended that, inasmuch as Kali Charan was never actually dispossessed, the plaintiff cannot recover, and that he had no right to enter into the compromise, and that he ought in any event to have waited until a suit was actually instituted. The second point was that the property really belonged to Durga Kunwar and did not belong to the other defendants, and that accordingly the suit should be dismissed, at least, as against them.

[171] We shall deal with the second point first. The property was purchased in the name of Durga Kunwar, but it was during the life-time of her husband, who, admittedly, was joint with his brother, the father of the other defendants. The sale deed in favour of Kali Charan purports to be made on behalf of the other defendants as well as Durga Kunwar. In the written statement filed on behalf of the defendants other than Durga Kunwar, it is admitted that the property was sold by them, but it is alleged that they were only selling such title as had been got from Durga Dei. They also admitted in paragraph 4 that they were the purchasers from Durga Dei, and it was never expressly alleged in the written statement that Mirpur Harriapur belonged exclusively to Durga Kunwar. We therefore can pay no attention whatever to the statement of the pleader in the rubkar of the 6th of June, 1911, that the property was exlusively hers. In any event we think that, inasmuch as the property was sold as belonging to the joint family, the joint family are liable at the suit of the purchaser assuming that there was a breach of the covenant.

We now deal with the question as to whether or not Kali Charan was bound to wait until a suit was brought or whether he was entitled, after giving due notice, to enter into such compromise as he thought fit and was reasonable. A very similar question arose in the case of Smith v. Compton (1). In that case a suit was brought against the vendee, who compromised the suit before judgment, paying £. 550. He then brought a suit against the covenantors for breach of their covenant for title. It was contended that the plaintiff could not recover the money which he had paid by way of compromise, because he had not given notice to the defendants, and consequently that he was not entitled to recover the costs which he paid to his own attorney for defending the action up to the time of the compromise. Lord TENTERDEN, C. J., says:

"I am of opinion that there should be no rule. The only effect of want of notice in such a case as this, is to let in the party who is called upon for an indemnity to show that the plaintiff has no claim in respect of the alleged loss or not to the amount alleged, that he made an improvident bargain, and that the defendant might have obtained better terms, if the opportunity had been given [172] him. That was not proved here, and we cannot assume it. As to the costs, the plaintiff here had a right to claim an indemnity, and he is not indemnified unless he receives the amount of the costs paid by him to his own attorney."

It will thus appear that the learned Chief Justice considered that the plaintiff was entitled to compromise the action and to claim the amount for which he compromised, together with the costs of defending the suit PARKE, J., says:—

"I am of the same opinion. The effect of notice to an indemnifying party is stated by BULLER, J., in Duffield v. Scott, 3 T. R., 374:—'The purpose of giving notice is not in order to give a ground of action, but if a demand be made, which the person indemnifying is bound to pay, and notice be given to him, and he refuse to defend the action, in consequence of which the person to be indemnified is obliged to pay the demand, that is equivalent to a judgment and estops the other party from saying that the defendant in the first action was not bound to pay the money.'"

The only distinction that can be drawn between the case cited and the present, is that the plaintiff in the present case settled what he considered to be a claim which he could not resist without waiting until a suit was actually brought. We can see no reason or principle why if a person entitled to an indemnity is competent to compromise a suit which is brought, he is not equally competent to settle the dispute before suit. If he has given due notice to the indemnifying party, the indemnifying party, on the authority of the case to which we have referred, is not entitled to come forward and say that the compromise was not a fair and reasonable one.

In any event the court below has in our judgment given very good reasons for holding that the compromise in the present case was a reasonable and fit one. Furthermore, it was never alleged by the defendants that they were in a position to show that Durga Dei had authority to sell the property in question absolutely, or that there was any other claimant who could come forward, and it has been admitted by the learned advocate for the plaintiff that he has no further claim against the defendants upon foot of the covenants contained in the sale deed from the Court of Wards, so far as the village of Mirpur Harriapur is concerned.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

TUDBALL, J. :—This matter and Revisions Nos. 1012 and 1013 of 1912, arise out of the following circumstances :—

The three applicants Lala Dina Nath, L. Kashi Ram and L. Hazari Lal, and one Lala Devi Dat are the directors of the Union Indian Sugar Mills Company, Ld., Cawnpore. They were placed upon their trial on the complaint of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies on a charge under section 74 of the Companies Act, VI of 1882, no balance sheet having been filed with the Registrar within the time fixed or within the extension allowed by him ; the [174] offence being that of knowingly and wilfully authorizing or permitting the default mentioned above. The case was tried summarily by a Magistrate of the first class, who acquitted Lala Devi Dat and imposed a penalty of Rs. 50 on each of the other directors. The three latter have come here in revision. A great deal has been said about the merits of the case, but in view of the order which I am going to pass I abstain from making any remarks thereon.

It is urged that the Magistrate had no power to try the case summarily. With this I cannot agree. Under section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure a Magistrate has power to try summarily all offences not punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months. The word 'offence' is defined in the Code as "any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force." Section 5 of the Code lays down that "All offences under the Indian Penal Code shall be investigated, inquired into, tried and otherwise dealt with according to the provisions laid down in the Code of Criminal Procedure." Clause (2) of the section lays down that "All offences under any other law shall be similarly dealt with according to the same provisions, but subject to any enactment for the time being in force regulating the manner or the place of investigating, inquiring into, trying or otherwise dealing with such offences." There is nothing in the Companies Act which lays down that a Magistrate having summary powers shall not try an offence under that Act in a summary manner. It is true that under section 252 all offences under the Act may be tried by any Magistrate of the first class unless the period of imprisonment to which the offender is liable exceeds that which such officer is competent to award under the law for the time being in force in the place where he is employed. When the period of imprisonment provided by the Act exceeds the period that may be awarded by such officer, the offender shall be committed for trial to the Court of Session. There is nothing in this portion of the section which takes away the Magistrate's power to try summarily cases within his jurisdiction, nor does the second clause of the section take away any such power. As a matter of fact a Presidency Magistrate has power to try all cases under the Act in a summary way irrespective of the sentence he may impose.

[175] Section 262 of the Code of Criminal Procedure lays down the limit to the sentences of imprisonment which may be awarded at a summary trial. There is nothing in chapter XXII which limits the amount of fine which may be imposed in a summary trial; the sections which deal with appeals in the Code, however, show that a sentence of fine exceeding Rs. 50 is an appealable sentence. But though it cannot be said that the Magistrate has been guilty of any illegality in trying the case summarily, there are very good grounds why he should not have done so. In the first place the penalty which may be imposed under section 74 is one of Rs. 1,000 neither more nor less. An examination of the Act would show that everywhere (with two exceptions) where the Act lays down a penalty for an offence in the shape of fine it clearly lays down a maximum, which is not to be exceeded, and sections 25, 55, 57 and 66 are all instances of this. In section 66 (1) any Limited Company which does not paint or affix its name in the manner directed by the Act, is held liable to a penalty not exceeding Rs. 50. But in the last clause of the same section it is distinctly laid down that the Director, Manager or Officer of the Company, who is guilty of the act mentioned in this clause, shall be liable to a penalty of Rs. 1,000. Similarly in section 74 it is laid down that a Director or Manager of a Company shall be liable to a penalty of Rs. 1,000. If the Legislature had intended that in these two cases there should be a maximum penalty and not a fixed penalty, it would have used the same languages as it has used in other sections of the Act, just in the same way as in the Indian Penal Code it has been laid down that sentence shall not be more or less than a fixed amount, clearly showing that the court should exercise its discretion as to the sentence to be imposed. The only decision which is on all fours with the present case is the case of Queen Empress v. Moore (1). That was under section 35 of the Companies Act, which has since been repealed. That section ran as follows: —"If a share-warrant is issued without being duly stamped, the company issuing the same, and also every person who at the time when it is issued is the managing Director or Secretary or other principal officer of the Company, shall forfeit the sum of Rs. 500." It was in that case held that the forfeiture was a penalty and that a forfeiture of Rs. 500 was [176] the fixed penalty laid down by the Statute. It seems to me clear that the penalty laid down in section 74 is also a penalty fixed by Statute and the Magistrate was not competent to inflict any lesser penalty. If the Magistrate had inflicted this penalty, it is clear that the person convicted would have had a right of appeal. The case is one in which a great deal of correspondence has been put forward and is by no means of that simple character to which a summary trial is intended to be restricted. In deciding whether or not he will try a case summarily it is for the Magistrate to exercise a wise discretion and ordinarily he ought to restrict such trials to simple cases. In my opinion the present case was one in which, even if it had been tried summarily and a proper penalty imposed, an appeal would have been of very little use to the persons convicted, as a great mass of important evidence is not on this record. It seems to me essentially one of those cases which the Magistrate should have tried in an ordinary way, duly recording the evidence. The case has not been properly tried and ought to be tried de novo.

It is urged on behalf of Lala Devi Dat, who was acquitted by the Magistrate that the order of acquittal should not be set aside, as the Magistrate has found that Devi Dat had done his best to bring about the filing of the balance sheet. This is really a point on the merits of the case. Without full evidence before me it is impossible to say whether Devi Dat is innocent or guilty, nor would it be right for me to express any opinion, especially as I am ordering a new trial. The case in my opinion has not been satisfactorily tried and ought to be tried de novo. I therefore set aside the convictions and sentences on Lala Dina Nath, Lala Kashi Ram and Lala Hazari Lal. I set aside the acquittal of Lala Devi Dat and order the case to be tried de novo by some Magistrate, other than the Magistrate who has decided the case, to whom the District Magistrate may think it fit to send it.

G. J. BOWER (Judgment-debtor) v. IMPERIAL BANK LIMITED (Decree-holder).*

Act No. VI of 1882 (Indian Companies Act), section 169—Company—Winding up—Appeal—Notice.

Held, that the provisions of section 169 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, as to service of notice of appeal are imperative, and if the requisite notice has not been served within three weeks from the date of the order complained of and the time for service has not been extended by the appellate court, the appeal cannot be heard.

THIS was an appeal from an order passed in the matter of the winding up of a company in the following circumstances. The respondent Bank was being wound up. The appellant was one of the contributories. The winding up was in the court of the Additional District Judge of Aligarh, where, it appears, the appellant took an objection on the ground that the decree passed against him in favour of the Bank was time-barred. The objection was disallowed. The decree holders applied to enforce the order of the court under section 167 of the Companies Act and the matter went to the court of the Second Additional Judge of Meerut. There the appellant raised further objections as well as the objection as to limitation; but they were disallowed.

The contributory thereupon appealed to the High Court.

the objection as to limitation; but they were disallowed. The appellant has come upon appeal to this Court.

A preliminary objection is taken that notice under section 169 of the Act has not been given and that therefore the appeal cannot be heard. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the order which he seeks to have upset on appeal is not an order which was made in the matter of the winding up of the Company. With this we cannot agree. It is clearly and distinctly an order which was given in the matter of the winding up of the Company. If it is not, we do not know under what law he comes to this Court on appeal. Under the last clause of section 169 it was obligatory on him to give notice within three weeks, which he has failed to do. Therefore we cannot hear the appeal. On behalf of the appellant Mr. Chaudhri asked for an extension of time. The order of the court below was passed on the 28th of June, 1912, and this appeal was filed on the 7th of August, 1912. No good cause is shown why we should extend the time, and we see no reason to accede to the request. The preliminary objection prevails and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Execution of decree—Limitation—Suit for sale on a mortgage—Decree payable by instalments—Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 258—Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XXI. rule 2; order XXXIV, rule 5—Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule 1, article 181.

On a compromise in a suit for sale on a mortgage a decree followed providing that the sum found due on the mortgage (Rs. 1,374), with interest at a certain rate, should be paid by instalments of Rs. 100 a year, along with the interest then due. Payments were to be made by the end of Jeth in each year, beginning with Jeth 1957 Fasli (June 1900) and it was provided that if default were made for three years in succession in the payments and interest, the decree-holder would be at liberty to recover at once the whole amount payable under the decree, that is, to apply for an order absolute for sale and execute the same. No payment was made in 1900 or 1901, but in June 1902, just before the end of Jeth 1959 Fasli, the judgment-debtor paid up all that was [179] due on account of the first three years. He made no payment in 1903, but in June 1904 he paid up all that was due up to the end of Jeth 1960 Fasli (June 1903). No payment was made in 1905, but in June 1906 he paid the instalment and interest which he ought to have paid in Jeth 1961 Fasli (June 1904). This payment was covered by the proviso to section 20 (1) of the Limitation Act. The only other payment made was a small sum on account of interest in July 1909. The decree-holder applied for an order absolute for sale on the 3rd of August, 1909.

Held that the first three consecutive defaults were in 1905, 1906 and 1907, and that the decree-holder's application was in time applying article 181 of the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 178= 18 I. C. 731 =11 A. L. J. 224.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

A decree on a compromise was passed on the 11th of September, 1899, to the following effect :—" Rs. 1,374 with interest at As. 10 per cent. per mensem shall be paid by instalments of Rs. 100 a year. Agar mutawattir tin sal tak ada na ho ya kuch baqi rahe to digridar ko ikhtiar hai etc., etc." The first instalment was due in June, 1900. In June, 1902, Rs. 605 were paid on account of the instalments, principal and interest, due for 1900, 1901, and 1902. No payment was made in 1903. In June, 1904, Rs. 181 were paid, which were credited by the decree-holder towards principal and interest of the instalment for 1903. The decree-holder alleged a further payment of Rs. 173-1-0 in June, 1906, which the decree-holder credited towards the instalment due for 1904. This payment was not admitted by the opposite party, who was a representative of the judgment-debtor. The present application for the preparation of a final decree was made on the 3rd of August, 1909, and the opposite party objected that the application was barred by limitation. The court below held that the alleged payment of June, 1906, was proved to have been made by the opposite party but that it had not been certified to the court. Both the courts below disallowed the objection as to limitation. The judgment-debtor's representative appealed.

[180] Babu Piari Lal Banerji, for the appellant :—

The payment of 1906 should not be recognized at all as it was not certified to the court executing the decree. Under order XXI, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure the alleged payment could not be inquired into even for the purpose of seeing whether the present application was barred by limitation. Under the old Code an uncertified payment could be recognized for the purpose of such inquiry ; Roshan Singh v. Mata Din (6). The change in the law has been noticed and given effect to in the case of Kutab-ullah Sarkar v. Durga Charan Rudra (7). The fact that the alleged payment was made while the old Act was in force will not make the old Act applicable. The court has now to decide the question with reference to the procedure now applicable. It cannot be said that by the alleged payment any substantive right was acquired. The decree-holder could not say that by the payment he acquired any right which was not affected by the repeal of the old Act. It is true that this Court has held that the new Code of Civil Procedure would not affect any right acquired under the old Code ; Kaunsilla v. Ishri Singh (8). But that was a very different case. Under the law as it stood in the old Code a decree-holder who had obtained a decree on foot of a mortgage was not fettered by the twelve years' rule of limitation and he therefore did acquire this substantive right : to quote the words of KNOX, J. :—" the decree-holder had the remedy to enforce his right so to speak till the end of time " and it was held therefore that section 48 of the new Code would not affect mortgage decrees passed before the new Code came into force. No such consideration arose in the present case, as the question was merely one of procedure, in which no one had a vested right. If the payment of 1906 was not recognized, the application was obviously time-barred, because there were three consecutive defaults in 1904, 1905 and 1906 and therefore the right to apply accrued in June, 1906, and the application should have been made in June, 1909. Even if the payment of June, 1906, were recognized, still the application was time-barred, because the payment made in June, 1906, had not the effect of paying in full the instalment due for June, 1906, and did not prevent the year 1906 from being a [181] year of default, and therefore there were three consecutive defaults in 1904, 1905 and 1906. No payment made in 1906 could wipe away the default of 1904 and 1905 which had already occurred, but if the payment had been made in full for the instalment due in 1906 it might have prevented a third consecutive default and thus have prevented the accrual of the right to apply.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondent :—

The first point to be considered is whether the application made for a final decree for sale under order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure is an application for execution or an application in the suit itself. If it is an application in the suit itself then the provisions of order XXI, rule 2, will not apply. Under the new Code an application under order XXXIV, rule 2, is not an application in the suit itself; Sita Ram v. Sheo Raj Singh (1). Even if the matter is treated as a matter in execution order XXI, rule 2, of the new Code would not apply, as the payments were made while the old Code was in force and uncertified payments could under that Code be recognized for the purpose of saving limitation; Kaunsilla v. Ishri Singh (2). Whether, therefore, the old Code applies or the new, order XXI, rule 2, has no application. As regards the proper construction of the decree as the payment was made in 1906 and was accepted by the decree-holder, the right to apply was waived. It was for the decree-holder to insist or not on punctual payments and if he chose to show favour to the judgment-debtor and accepted an overdue instalment, the judgment-debtor could not complain. The three consecutive defaults were made in 1905, 1906 and 1907. The application was made within time in 1909. He cited Shankar Prasad v. Jalpa Prasad (3), Bhagwan Das v. Janki (4), Ajudhia v. Kunjal (5), Maharaja of Benares v. Nand Ram (6).

Babu Piari Lal Banerji, in reply :—

The present matter is one in execution, as after the decree nisi had been passed under the old Code, the suit came to an end and therefore it could not be said, that by the new Code a suit which [182] had terminated was revived. He discussed Ganga Singh v. Banwari Lal (7) and Amlook Chand Parrack v. Sarat Chunder Mukerjee (8).

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ. :—The only question in this appeal is whether the respondent's application for a decree absolute for the sale of mortgaged property was made within time. The decree nisi, which was passed in 1899 upon a compromise between the parties, provided that Rs. 1,374-0-0 with interest at a certain rate should be paid by instalments of Rs. 100 a year along with the interest then due. Payments were to be made by the end of Jeth in each year beginning with Jeth 1957 Fasli (June 1900), and it was provided that if default were made for three years in succession in the payments and interest, the decree-holder would be at liberty to recover at once the whole amount payable under the decree, i.e., to apply for an order absolute for sale of the property and execute the same.

No payment was made in 1900 or in 1901, but in June 1902, just before the end of Jeth 1959 Fasli, the appellant paid up all that was due on account of the first three years. He made no payment in 1903, but in June 1904 he paid up all that was due up to the end of Jeth 1960 Fasli (June 1903). No payment was made in 1905, but in June 1906 he paid the instalment and interest which he ought to have paid in Jeth 1961 Fasli (June 1904). It has been found that this payment is covered by the proviso to section 20 (1) of the Limitation Act. The only other payment made was a small sum on account of interest in July 1909 which has no bearing upon the question which we have to decide.

The appellant contends that the payment made in June 1906 not having been certified cannot be recognized by the court in view of the provisions of order XXI, rule 2. To this the respondent replies that that rule is not applicable, inasmuch as the application for a decree absolute is not an application for execution and the court is not being asked to execute a decree but only to continue the suit. The payment in question was made before the passing of the new Code of Civil Procedure. Under the old Code it was, no doubt, held by this Court that an application for an order absolute was a proceeding in execution of a decree—see Oudh [183] Behari Lal v. Nageshar Lal (1)—but it was held also in several cases that although an uncertified payment could not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of a decree by a court executing a decree, it was available to a decree-holder for the purpose of meeting a plea of limitation—see for example Kishan Singh v. Aman Singh (2) and Roshan Singh v. Mata Din (3). These rulings are binding upon us. The right which the respondent had before the passing of the new Code of Civil Procedure, to use the payment made in 1906 for this purpose, cannot have been taken away from him by the passing of the Code. We are therefore bound to recognize the payment when dealing with the question of limitation.

We have to ascertain what article of the Limitation Act is applicable and when time began to run against the respondent. In Chunni Lal v. Harnam Das (4) article 179, schedule II, to the Limitation Act of 1877 (article 182 of schedule I to the present Act) was held to govern an application for an order absolute for sale of mortgaged property. But the decree nisi in that case was in the common form, whereas in the present case we have an instalment decree containing a provision that the whole amount of the decree may be demanded on the occurrence of three consecutive defaults, and it is difficult to see how any of the provisions of the third column of article 182 of the present Act can be applied to such a case. It would appear that the article applicable is No. 181. This article corresponds with article 178 of the Act of 1877, which has been held in many cases to govern applications in execution proceedings to which for one reason or another article 179 of that Act could not be applied. If, as we think, article 181 of the present Act is applicable, the right to apply for an order absolute accrued to the appellant on the occurrence of the third consecutive default.

The respondent relies upon the decisions in Shankar Prasad v. Jalpa Prasad (1), Ajudhia v. Kunjal (2) and other like cases as authority for the proposition that the respondent was not bound to take out execution, i.e., apply for an order absolute, on the happening of the third consecutive default, though he was at [184] liberty to do so if he pleased, and therefore time did not necessarily begin to run against him from the date of the third consecutive default. We need not discuss these cases, two of which were governed by article 75, for it cannot be denied that if article 181 is applicable the right to apply for an order absolute accrued to the appellant on the happening of the third consecutive default. The question is when did that occur? The defaults in 1900 and 1901 were wiped out by the payment made in June 1902. There was a default in 1903, another in 1904 and a third in 1905. The respondent contends that those defaults were wiped out by the payments made and accepted in 1904 and 1906. There is a consensus of opinion among the High Courts that the subsequent payment and acceptance of overdue instalments must be taken into consideration for the purpose of applying the rules of limitation to an instalment decree, although the articles applicable contain no such provision as that to be found in article 75. The Calcutta High Court seem to treat it as a case of waiver and as an exception to the rule that limitation runs from the date of default—Mon Mohun Roy v. Durga Churn Gooee (3)—and the same view seems to have been accepted by this Court and by the Madras High Court. The Bombay High Court treat it as a kind of estoppel—Kashiram v. Pandu (4). Whatever may be the true reason for the rule, it seems to be well settled that after defaults have occurred, which according to the decree set time running against the decree-holder, the payment and acceptance of the overdue instalments may have the effect of preventing him from saying that the payments were not made regularly and in satisfaction of the decree, and remitting the parties to the rights which they would have had if no default had occurred. In the present case there can be no doubt that the respondent accepted the payment made in June, 1904, in satisfaction of the instalments and interest payable in June, 1903. Similarly he accepted the payment made in June, 1906, in satisfaction of the instalments and interest payable in June, 1904, and if he had applied for an order absolute or sale at any time before July, 1907, it would certainly have been held by this Court that his action was premature.

On the authorities we feel bound to hold that the first three consecutive defaults of which the respondent can take advantage [185] are those which occurred in 1905, 1906 and 1907. Consequently his application for a decree absolute made in August 1909, must be held to have been made within time. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

SHIDA ALI (Plaintiff) v. PHULLO AND ANOTHER (Defendants). *

Act No. IX of 1903 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule I, article 132—Limitation—Malikana—Suit for malikana—Decree asked for against property charged.

Where a plaintiff sued for the recovery of malikana for 11 years and claimed a decree against the property on which the malikana was charged, it was held that the suit was within time having regard to article 132 of the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1903. Kallar Roy v. Ganga Pershad Singh (1) distinguished.

[Ref. 17 A. L J. 177=49 I. C. 737.]

THE facts of this case were as follows.—

The plaintiff sued on the allegations that in mauza Razzakpur the owners of muafi rights were bound to pay to the owners of zamindari rights Rs. 12-8-0 per cent. of cash rental, $2\frac{3}{4}$ seer per maund of the grain rental, and Rs. 17-3-0 a year as bhent (present); that these dues were a charge on the muafi rights; that in mahal safed of that mauza there was a patti of 5 biswas; that the defendant was a muafidar of the whole of that and a zamindar of 3 biswa, 2 biswannsis, 10 kachwansis of it; that the plaintiff was a zamindar of one biswa 17 biswansis 10 kachwansis and entitled to recover the aforesaid dues in respect of that; that the defendant had not paid him any thing for the years 1305 fasli to 1316 fasli; hence this suit for Rs. 625-6-4 as principal, and Rs. 498-9-0 as interest, to be realized from the defendant's 85 biswas. The defendants pleaded that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court; that the amount of bhent was not Rs. 17-8-0 per annum; that the dues payable were not a charge on the land; that the dues in question were payable by the holder of the whole 20 biswa zamindari rights jointly to the holders of the whole 20 biswa muafi rights, therefore the suit against the defendants alone was not maintainable and was bad for non-joinder of parties; that the plaintiff himself owned muafi right over five biswas till the [186] 21st of December, 1908, on which date $4\frac{1}{2}$ biswas were auctioned off and half a biswa was still held by him; that a large part of the claim is barred by limitation; that the amounts of rental and quantities of zamindari rights as mentioned by the plaintiff were wrong, and that the claim about interest was wrong. The court below dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the appellant, relied on Hurmuzi Begum v. Hirdaynarain (2) Churaman v. Balli (3), Lallubhai v. Naran (4) and Jagarnath Pershad Singh v. Kharach Lal (5) and submitted that the malikana being a charge on property the whole amount was recoverable. Article 132 of the Limitation Act was applicable.

Tha Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondents, contended that the claim, except that for three years, was barred by limitation. He relied on Kallar Roy v. Ganga Pershad Singh (1).

Mr. S. A. Haidar was not heard in reply.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ.:—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit to recover eleven years' arrears of malikana. The plaintiff asked for a decree against the property, on which, he says, the malikana allowance was chargeable. The court below has given him a decree for Rs. 57-3-4 only. In appeal to this Court it is pointed out, on behalf of the appellant, that the court below, in making its calculation, has made an obvious mistake and that the sum due to the plaintiff appellant on the basis adopted by the court below should be Rs. 262-12-5, to which should be added Rs. 18-0-0 on account of bhent. The defendants respondents have filed objections, and it is contended on their behalf that the suit is barred by time. Reliance is placed on Kallar Roy v. Ganga Pershad Singh (1). In that case the learned Judges refused to apply the provisions of article 132 of the Limitation Act, the reason being that in the particular case before them the plaintiff had not asked for a decree against the property chargeable with malikana. In the present case the plaintiff asked for a decree against the property, although the court below has not granted it. The explanation to article 132 leaves no doubt as to the period [187] of limitation applicable to suits of this nature. We allowed the appeal so far that in lieu of the decree for Rs. 57-3-4 passed by the court below we substitute a decree for Rs. 280-12-5. Parties will pay and receive costs in proportion to failure and success in both courts. The cross objections are dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 11—Res judicata—Two suits, one judgment and two decrees—Two appeals of which one abates before the other is heard.

A plaintiff instituted, on the same day and in the same court, two suits, in each of which the claim was for a declaration that he was the mahant of a certain math. The one was against defendant A only, the other against defendants A and S. Both suits were decided by a single judgment, but a separate decree was framed in each. In the former suit A appealed. In the latter S appealed, but A did not. Pending A's appeal S died and his appeal abated and the judgment in the case became final. Held that the hearing of A's appeal was barred. Zaharia v. Debia (2) followed.

In this case two suits were instituted in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur apparently on the same day. The plaintiff in both suits was mahant Udai Bhan Pargas alias Angan Das. In one suit the defendant was Anant Das; and in the other Anant Das and Sundar Das. In both suits the plaintiff claimed a declaration that he was mahant of a certain math. In the latter suit the claim was as follows:—"The plaintiff's title and the defendants' want of title may be established, and it may be declared that the plaintiff is entitled to receive the papers and the box aforesaid. The box and the papers detailed below may be awarded to the plaintiff." In the earlier part of the plaint the plaintiff stated "but as both the defendants deny the plaintiff's title, he brings this claim against both the defendants in respect of a box which contains papers, documents, etc., . . . and which Sundar Das the defendant has taken back after the institution of this suit without the plaintiff's knowledge." Both the suits were tried together, and amongst the issues framed were the following:—"Is the plaintiff chela of Karan Das, and was he appointed mahant? Has the plaintiff a right to sue? What is the custom relating to the mahantship, and was the plaintiff [188] appointed mahant according to that custom?" The result was that in the suit in which both Anant Das and Sundar Das were defendants there was a decree against both declaring the plaintiff's title. From that decree Sundar Das appealed, but Anant Das did not. This appeal, however, abated, Sundar Das having died, and no steps having been taken within time to bring his legal representative on to the record. The decree, therefore, in this case, became final. In the other case Anant Das appealed, but when the appeal came on for hearing a preliminary objection was raised to the effect that the decree in the first case having become final operated as res judicata in regard to this appeal.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal and Munshi Govind Prasad, for the appellant.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji and Munshi Iswar Saran, for the respondent.

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground of res judicata. It is necessary shortly to state the facts in order that it may be understood how the question arises. Two suits were instituted in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur apparently on the same day. The plaintiff in both the suits was mahant Udai Bhan Pargas alias Angan Das. In the present suit Anant Das was the only defendant. In the other suit the defendants were (1) Sundar Das and (2) Anant Das, the appellant in this appeal. In both suits the plaintiff claimed a declaration that he was the mahant of a certain math. In the suit in which both Sundar Das and Anant Das were defendants the claim was as follows:—

"The plaintiff's title and the defendants' want of title may be established and it may be declared that the plaintiff is entitled to receive the papers and the box aforesaid. The box and the papers detailed below may be awarded to the plaintiff."

In the earlier part of the plaint the plaintiff stated "but as both the defendants deny the plaintiff's title, he brings this claim against both the defendants in respect of a box which contains papers, documents, etc., ... and which Sundar Das, the defendant, has taken back after the institution of this suit without the plaintiff's knowledge."

[189] Both the suits were tried together in the court below and amongst the issues framed were the following:—"Is the plaintiff chela of Karan Das and was he appointed mahant? Has the plaintiff a right to sue? What is the custom relating to the mahantship, and was the plaintiff appointed mahant according to that custom?" These issues were decided in favour of the plaintiff. The result was that in the suit in which both Sundar Das and Anant Das were defendants, there was a decree against both the defendants, declaring the plaintiff's title, after the issues to we have referred had been decided. From the decree in that suit Sundar Das alone appealed, but Anant Das did not prefer an appeal. The appeal of Sundar Das abated by reason of the fact that after his death no steps were taken to bring his representatives on the record within the time allowed by law. Anant Das, however, did appeal in the suit out of which the present appeal arises, which, as we have already mentioned, was decided at the same time as the other suit, and by one and the same judgment. We must here mention that, although both suits were disposed of by the same judgment, separate decrees were drawn up in each case.

The respondent now by way of a preliminary objection contends that the appeal of Sundar Das having abated and Anant Das not having appealled from the decree in that suit, there is now a binding decree against him unappealed from. The appellant Anant Das, on the other hand, contends that section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which deals with res judicata, does not apply to the present case, because, the two suits were tried together and disposed of by one judgment on the same day, and secondly, because in any event, in the suit in which both Sundar Das and Anant Das were defendants, the real question was the title to the particular property mentioned in the plaint in that suit, and that therefore the decree which was given in that suit cannot be said to operate as res judicata on the question of the title to the property in dispute in the suit out of which the present appeal arises.

Section 11 of the Code is as follows: —"No court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a court competent [190] to try such subsequent suit, or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such court."

In explanation (1) " former suit " is defined as denoting a suit which has been decided prior to the suit in question, whether or not it was instituted prior thereto. It cannot for one moment be contended that the decree in the suit in which both Sundar Das and Anant Das were defendants has not now become final as against Anant Das. Beyond all question the issue as to whether the plaintiff was or was not the mahant was decided in that suit and we are now called upon to decide the same issue in the present appeal. The result might be that if we were now to hear the appeal, there would be one binding decree declaring that Udai Bhan was the mahant, and another equally binding decree declaring that he was not, both decrees being in suits to which Anant Das was a party. It seems to us that it was to prevent anomalies of this description (amongst other reasons) that section 11 was enacted. No doubt it is somewhat unfortunate in the present case that the appellant is unable to have the question decided by this Court by reason merely of the fact that he did not appeal against the dec[illegible] in the other suit. This view of the rule of res judicata was taken in th[illegible] Bench case of Zaharia v. Debia (1), a decision which is of course bi[illegible]us.

We accordingly disr[illegible]nding on[illegible]ith costs.

KUNWAR SEN AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. JWALA PRASAD AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).*

Act No. XIX of 1873 (North-Western Provinces and Oudh Land Revenue Act), sections 146, 148 and 167—"Proprietor"—Mortgage by muafidar—Sale of mahal for default in payment of Government revenue—Rights of purchaser and mortgagees of the muafi.

Where certain muafidars, whose rights as such accrued before the year 1870, and were not shown to have been created by the zamindars of the mahal in which the muafi land in question was situate, executed a usufructuary mortgage of such land, and thereafter the mahal was sold for default in [191] payment of Government revenue, it was held that the rights of the mortgagees were not extinguished in favour of the purchaser.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The plaintiffs brought a suit for the recovery of money or for possession on two mortgages in respect of land belonging to defendants 1 to 3. The mahal in which the land in question was situate was sold for arrears of revenue on the 24th of December, 1892, and purchased by one Jagan Bihari Lal, who again sold all his rights in the property to one Tara Chand, who was represented by defendants 4 to 6. These defendants contested the suit of the plaintiffs on the ground that they were the exclusive owners of the property having derived their title from Jagan Bihari Lal, to whom the whole mahal was sold at auction in default of arrears of revenue, and that even if defendants 1 to 3 (mortgagors) and the plaintiffs had any right as co-sharers, their right was extinguished after the sale of the property in view of the provisions of section 167 of Act XIX of 1873. The first court, relying upon sections 146 and 148 of Act XIX of 1873, held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for recovery of possession of the land in dispute. The lower appellate Court, however, found that the land in dispute was really nankar land and that no exproprietary tenancy had been created so far as the occupiers of the nankar land were concerned and held that the plaintiffs' rights in the land were in no way affected by the sale of the mahal and gave the plaintiffs a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. The defendants appealed.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Munshi Gulzari Lal), for the appellants:—

As the entire proprietary rights in the village were sold the mortgage in suit was extinguished and could not be enforced. The land in dispute is described in the wajib-ul-arz as being sir bila lagan bataur malikana wa bila mundarja khewat. The word 'proprietor' used in section 146 of Act XIX of 1873 was not used in any restrictive sense, and under the provisions of that section all proprietors and the entire mahal were liable for the revenue for the time being assessed on the mahal. And the entire mahal having been sold in default of arrears of revenue the rights of the mortgagees came to an end and the first court was right in dismissing the plaintiffs' claim in view of the provisions of section 167 of Act XIX of 1873.

*Second Appeal No. 152 of 1912 from a decree of H. Dupernex, District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 14th of December, 1911, reversing a decree of Gauri Shankar, Subordinate Judge of Fatehgarh, dated the 16th of May, 1911.

[192] Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondents, was not called upon.

KNOX and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—The plaintiffs to the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen describe themselves as mortgagees from certain persons whom they have arrayed as defendants 1 to 3. It appears that the mahal in which the land in dispute is situate was sold for arrears of revenue which were due from the mahal. On the 24th of December, 1892, the mahal was sold at a revenue sale and purchased by one Jagan Bihari Lal. Jagan Bihari Lal in turn sold all the rights he had purchased to one Tara Chand and defendants 4 to 6 are the representatives in interest of Tara Chand. The mortgagees are now seeking to enforce their rights and ask that the mortgage money may be awarded to them by sale of the mortgaged property. The suit was defended only by defendants 4 to 6. The contention is that as the whole of the mahal, including the area in dispute, was sold to Jagan Bihari Lal, even if defendants 1 to 3 and the plaintiffs had any right as co-sharers, that right became extinct under section 167 of Act XIX of 1873. The land in dispute, they say, though known as grove land, is not actually a grove, but has been actually under cultivation from a long time prior to the execution of the mortgage set up by the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad, before whom the suit came in the first instance, relying upon sections 146 and 148 of Act No. XIX of 1873, held that the plaintiffs might be granted a decree for recovery of possession of the land in dispute. In appeal the learned Judge found that the land in dispute was really nankar land and no exproprietary tenancy had been created so far as the occupiers of the nankar land were concerned. He further held that their rights in the land were in no way affected by the sale of the zamindari. He therefore decreed the suit, against the first three defendants, for recovery of possession of the land in suit by the plaintiffs as usufructuary mortgagees of these defendants' interest as exproprietary tenants of the land in suit, for Rs. 800-0-0. But he dismissed the rest of the suit. Defendants 4 to 6 have appealed to this Court and they again contend that as the entire proprietary rights in the village Neknampur were sold, the mortgage in suit was extinguished and could not be enforced.

[193] Apparently the confusion into which the Subordinate Judge fell arose from the words in which the land in dispute is described in the wajib-ul-arz at the settlement of 1870. There the land is set out as being sir, bila lagani bataur malikana wa bila mundarja khewat, and it has been strongly argued before us that the terms used in sections 146 and 148 of Act XIX of 1873 justify the contention. It is true that in section 146 it is said that in the case of every mahal the entire mahal and all the proprietors jointly and severally shall be responsible to Government for the revenue for the time being assessed on the mahal, and that section 148 provides that any sum not so paid becomes thereupon an arrear of revenue and the persons responsible for it become defaulters. We are also referred to section 53 of the same Act. The learned counsel was asked whether he could produce any precedent in support of his contention that persons in a mahal who are generally known by the term muafidars and are, as in this case, persons who are not entered as payers of revenue to the Government for the time being, are, in the event of the mahal falling into arrears of payment of revenue, responsible for payment under section 146 and their rights, if the mahal is brought to sale, extinguished in favour of the seller. The rights of the mortgagors in the present case were rights which came into existence before the settlement of 1870. It is not shown, and it is in the highest degree improbable, that they were rights created by the zamindars who were responsible for the arrears under which the mahal in which the property in dispute was situate was brought to sale. In our opinion the word 'proprietor' used in sections 146 and 148 refers only to those who in the wajib-ul-arz are set out as being the persons on whom the revenue has been at the time of settlement assessed jointly or severally. The wajib-ul-arz of 1870 shows no such payment of revenue by the mortgagors in the present case. The contention raised in this appeal is in our opinion without force, and the view taken by the learned Judge is the correct view. It is not for us in the present case to say what precise position the mortgagee held in the mahal. All that we have to decide is what rights were sold in default of arrears of revenue. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

This was a suit upon a mortgage made by one Najaf Khan in favour of an ancestor of the plaintiff in May, 1868. The first set of defendants are the heirs of Najaf Khan. The second set are purchasers after the mortgage of various portions of the mortgaged property. The mortgage purported to have been made in consideration of a sum of Rs. 22 due on a prior mortgage of 1887 and two sums said to have been paid just before and just after the execution of the deed. The courts below held that the payment of these two sums had not been proved, but that the mortgage was good for the sum of Rs. 92 and interest thereon. The evidence that the last mentioned sum was due upon a prior mortgage consisted of a recital in the deed in suit and the production by heirs of the mortgagor of the earlier deed, which does not bear endorsement showing that it had been paid off.

The court of first instance decreed the claim to the extent mentioned, and this decree was affirmed in appeal by the District Judge. The defendants appealed, contending that the recital in the mortgage deed of receipt of consideration was not admissible as regards them.

The Hon'ble Munshi Gokul Prasad (with him Munshi Haribans Sahai), for the appellants, submitted that such a recital was no [195] evidence against a purchaser of property and should be proved against him. He relied on Manohar Singh v. Sumirta Kuar (1), Brajesheware Peshakar v. Budhanuddi (2), Ghurphekne v. Purmeshwar Dayal Dubey (3), Bisheswar Dayal v. Harbans Sahay (4) and Rahim Jan Bibi v. Imam Jan (5).

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the respondents, cited Lalak Singh v. Ajudhia Prasad (6).

The Hon'ble Munshi Gokul Prasad, replied.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ.:—This was a suit upon a mortgage made by one Najaf Khan in favour of an ancestor of the plaintiff in May, 1868. The first set of defendants are the heirs of Najaf Khan. The second set are purchasers after the mortgage of various portions of the mortgaged property. The mortgage purports to have been made in consideration of a sum of Rs. 22 due on a prior mortgage of 1867 and two sums said to have been paid just before and just after the execution of the deed. The courts below have held that the payment of these two sums has not been proved, but that the mortgage holds good for the sum of Rs. 92 and interest thereon.

The evidence that the last mentioned sum was due upon a prior mortgage consists of a recital in the deed in suit and the production by the heirs of the mortgagor of the earlier deed which does not bear any endorsement showing that it had been paid off.

In second appeal it is contended that the recital in the deed is not admissible in evidence against the defendants. The defendants appellants rely upon the decisions of this Court in Manohar Singh v. Sumirta Kuar (1) and the decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Brajeshware Peshakar v. Budhanudai (2). Ghurphekni v. Purmeshwar Dayal Dubey (3) Bisheswar Dayal v. Harbans Sahay (4) and Rahim Jan Bibi v. Imam Jan (5).

The first of the Calcutta cases is no authority for the proposition that a recital of the receipt of consideration contained in a mortgage is not admissible in evidence against a subsequent transferee of the property. On the contrary, the Chief Justice, the only [196] one of the three Judges who discusses the question at all, shows at page 278 of the report how the mortgagor's admission of the receipt of consideration was admissible against a subsequent purchaser of the property. The statement at the foot of page 277 of the report, that a recital in a deed is not evidence against third persons must be read in conjunction with what follows. This seems to have been overlooked by the learned Judges who decided the case of Manohar Singh v. Sumirta Kuar (1). In the last mentioned case and in the case of Bisheswar Dayal v. Harbans Sahay (4) the question was whether the admission by a mortgagor of the receipt of the consideration contained in a deed was admissible in evidence against subsequent auction purchasers of the property. That question does not arise in the present case. There may be, we do not say that there is, some ground for distinguishing between the case of an auction purchaser and the case of mortgagee or a purchaser by private treaty. In the case of Ghurpheknı v. Purmeshwar Dayal Dubey (1) all that was held was that an admission of the receipt of consideration made by a mortgagor was not admissible against her step-daughters who, however, did not claim title under her. That decision has no bearing upon the present case. In the case of Rahim Jan Bibi v. Imam Jan (2) it was held that the recital of the receipt of consideration contained in a hibabiłewaz was not admissible against his daughter after his death. If, as seems to have been the case, the daughter was one of his heirs, we think that the correctness of the decision is open to doubt, for under section 21 of the Evidence Act an admission is relevant and may be proved as against the person who makes it or his representative in interest.

In Nawal Kunwar v. Bakhtawar Singh (3) it was held that a recital in a mortgage deed that a certain sum was due to the mortgagee was admissible in evidence against a subsequent purchaser, by private treaty, of the property mortgaged, and in Abdul Majid v. Mahbub Ali (4) it was held that a recital of the receipt of consideration contained in a deed of mortgage was as much binding upon his heirs as upon the mortgagor himself.

[197] It seems to us that the decisions in the two last mentioned cases are in reality supported by the decision in Brajeshware Peshakar v. Budhanuddi, and we must hold that the admission of the receipt of consideration contained in the mortgage deed now in suit is admissible against the defendants appellants, who are representatives in interest of the original mortgagor.

It is not for us in second appeal to consider the value of the admission, but we may say that it receives in our opinion strong support from the production of the deed of 1867 which bears no signs of having been paid off.

For the above reasons we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Pandit Shiam Krishna Dar, for the appellants.

Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba and Munshi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondents.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ. :—The plaintiffs in this case, who are Muhammadans, allege that in the time of the Muhammadan kings a mosque and some houses were built in the town of Agra; that from that time the Muhammadans have always worshipped in the mosque and the property has all along been waqf; that some time [198] before 1875 the Mutawalli of the property mortgaged it to some Hindus, but in a suit brought in the court of the Subordinate Judge in 1875 it was declared that the property was waqf and the Muhammadans continued to worship in the mosque as before; that the plaintiffs had received information that the fifth defendant, when in charge of the mosque, transferred it to an ancestor of the defendants 1—4 who are Hindus; that this mortgage was invalid and notwithstanding the mortgage the Muhammadans continued to use the mosque as before, that defendants 1—4 instituted a suit against six Muhammadans in 1907 and obtained a decree, in execution of which they attempted to take possession of the property on the 20th of March, 1910, but the plaintiffs refused to deliver possession alleging themselves to be in possession of the property like other Muhammadans. The plaintiffs say that the cause of action accrued to them on the 20th of March, 1910, and they pray for a declaration that the property is waqf; that it was intended to be used as a place of worship by all Muhammadans; that it was not transferable, and that defendants 1—4 had acquired no title to the property. The defendants denied that the property was a mosque or that it had been used by the Muhammadans as such. They pleaded that the suit was barred by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also limitation. They pleaded further that the right of the Muhammadans, if any, was barred by the long continued adverse possession on the part of the defendants and their predecessors. Both the courts below have come to the conclusion that the property now in suit is part of the property which was in suit in 1875 and that the defendants have failed to prove adverse possession for more than twelve years. The District Judge says that the defendants may have been in possession of the property off and on, but they have not held possession continuously for the requisite period. We must accept these findings. There is nothing to show that the Muhammadans who were made defendants to the suit brought by the present defendants in 1907, were sued as representatives of the Muhammadan community or that the present plaintiffs in any way claim under them or are bound by the decision pronounced in that suit.

The only question which admits of any doubt is whether the present suit is maintainable. We have been referred to a large [199] number of decisions of this and other High Courts, and it is contended that such a suit as this cannot be maintained unless it is instituted under order 1, rule 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that individual Muhammadans are not entitled to reliefs such as are claimed in the present suit. There can, we think, be no doubt that a suit of this nature might be brought on behalf of the Muhammadan community, and we think that if the defendants had raised the question in the court of first instance, the Munsif might well have said that in the exercise of his discretion he would not give a declaratory relief unless the plaint was amended and the suit was brought on behalf of the whole Muhammadan community. There has been a great deal of litigation about this property and it would have been well if the suit had been so constituted as to put an end to all disputes once for all. It is difficult to see how the decision arrived at in the present case could be taken advantage of by, or be held binding on, the Muhammadan community in general. But it seems to us that on the authorities we are bound to hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain the suit. In the case of Jawahra v. Akbar Husain (1) it was held by a Full Bench of five Judges that every Muhammadan who has a right to use a mosque for purposes of devotion is entitled to exercise such right without hindrance and is competent to maintain a suit against anyone who inteferes with its exercise, irrespective of the provisions of sections 30 and 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. In the present case the defendants interfered with the rights of the plaintiff and attempted to turn them out of the mosque. We are bound to follow the decision of the Full Bench, which has been followed in other cases, and we must, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain this suit. There are other cases in this Court in which the Full Bench decision was followed, the latest case being that of Dasondhay v. Muhammad Abu Nasar (2). The relief claimed by the plaintiffs is perhaps a little wider than it should have been. But the defendants did not object to the form of relief claimed in the court of first instance, nor in the grounds of appeal to the lower appellate court did they contend that the suit should have been instituted under order 1, rule 8. The decision in this case will, as the District Judge has observed, be binding only as between the [200] plaintiffs and the defendants. In these circumstances we do not think it necessary to interfere with the decree. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

THIS was a suit under sections 150 and 154 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, for resumption of a rent-free grant. The plaintiff alleged that the grant was made for the performance of a specific service in connection with the Holi, which he no longer required. The court of first instance (an Assistant Collector of the first class) decreed the claim. On appeal, however, this decision was reversed by the District Judge, on the ground that the land, being grove-land, was not 'land held for agricultural purposes' within the meaning of section 4 (2) of the Tenancy Act, and was not 'land' within the meaning of the word as used in Chapter X of the Act. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff appealed.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Maulvi Mohammad Rahmatullah, for the appellant.

Munshi Govind Prasad, for the respondent.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ. :—This was a suit under sections 150 and 154 of the Tenancy Act for resumption of a rent-free grant. The plaintiff alleged that the grant was made for the performance of a specific service in connection with the Holi, which he no longer required. The Assistant Collector decreed the claim, but on appeal his decision was reversed on the ground that the land, being groveland, was not 'land held for agricultural purposes' within the [201] meaning of section 4 (2) of the Tenancy Act, and was not 'land' within the meaning of the word as used in Chapter X of the Act.

In the papers prepared at the settlement of 1836 and 1872 the land was recorded as held under a service grant, and during the current settlement it is recorded as a rent-free grant, and the wajib-ul-arz says that the land shall be held subject to the service to be rendered at the Holi.

The District Judge has not recorded a definite finding that the land is held rent-free on account of the service, but on the evidence no other conclusion is possible.

The plot however is a grove, apparently a mango grove, and has been recorded as such at all the three settlements. 'Land' is defined in the Tenancy Act as land let or held for agricultural purposes. The latest reported opinion of the Board of Revenue is that a grove is not 'land' as defined in the Act—see Megh Singh v. Nazar Fatma (2), where a previous decision of the Board regarding a guava grove was considered and distinguished. In Sheo Mangal v. Sardar Singh (1) two Judges of this Court doubted whether a grove was land within the meaning of the definition contained in the Act but the question was not definitely decided and, as far as we are aware, never has been decided by this Court.

It is impossible to say whether the plot was a grove when the grant now in question was made ; but, assuming that it was not then a grove, it has been a grove since 1836, and it must be presumed that if the trees were not standing on the land at the time of the grant they were subsequently planted with the consent of the proprietor.

In our opinion land held as a grove, whether on payment of rent or not, is not land held for agricultural purposes, and we can discover no reason for holding that the word 'land' is used in Chapter X of the Act otherwise than in the sense indicated by the definition.

In this view it must be held that the suit was not maintainable under Chapter X of the Act, nor would it avail the plaintiff if we were to treat the suit as one for ejectment of a tenant, for a rent-free grantee is not a tenant as defined in the Act.

[202] It appears to us that if the plaintiff has any remedy it is by way of a suit in a civil court. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Held that an agreement executed by a mortgagee after the date of the mortgage whereby he relinquished a certain part of the principal and all interest, past and future, on the mortgage in lieu of certain services rendered by the mortgagor to the mortgagee was a document which required registration to make it admissible in evidence, and it could not be said to be an acknowledgement of payment within the meaning of the exception contained in section 17, clause (n), of the Indian Registration Act, 1877.

[Fol. 44 I. C. 132=34 M. L. J. 79=7 L. W. 229=1913 M. W. N. 262.]

THIS was a suit for sale upon a mortgage, dated the 21st of March 1900. In answer to the suit pro tanto the defendants pleaded that after the mortgage had been executed the mortgagors rendered certain services to the mortgagee and that in consideration of those services a certain part of the principal and all interest up to date and all future interest were relinquished by the mortgagee. To prove this agreement a certain document was tendered in evidence. The document was unstamped and unregistered. The difficulty as to the stamp was got over by payment of the duty and penalty, but the lower appellate Court rejected the document as inadmissible for want of registration and decreed the claim in full. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

1877 (which was the Registration Act in force at the time of the execution of the document in question), provides that certain documents must be registered. A later section provides that documents which require to be registered cannot be admitted in evidence unless they are registered. Amongst the documents requiring registration are all documents of a non-testamentary nature which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest of a certain value to or in immoveable property. There can be no doubt that prior to the execution of the document in question the mortgagee had a right to realize from the property mortgaged, all principal, together with all interest then accrued or that might thereafter accrue due on foot of the mortgage.

It is argued that the document in question comes within the exception mentioned in clause (n) to section 17. That clause exempts from the necessity of registration any endorsement on a mortgage deed acknowledging payment of the whole or any part of the mortgage money and also any other receipt for payment of money due under a mortgage when the receipt does not purport to extinguish the mortgage. In our opinion the document in question cannot be said to come within the exceptions mentioned in clause (n). The document is clearly an agreement to forego in part the plaintiffs' rights as against the mortgaged property in consideration of services rendered. It cannot in any sense be said to be a receipt for the payment of money not extinguishing the mortgage in whole or in part. It clearly does extinguish the mortgage to the extent of a considerable portion of the principal and the whole of the interest.

[204] Under these circumstances we think that the decision of the court below was correct. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Ram Chandra Naik Kalia. The latter put in an application for execution of the portion of the decree transferred to him. The lower court held that the transfer in favour of Ram Chandra Naik Kalia was valid, but that he was not entitled to put the decree into execution, because, under order XXI, rule 16, the transferee became a joint decree-holder with Musammat Najm-un-nissa and as such he could not take out execution in respect of his share of the decree. The application was accordingly dismissed. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh (with him Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri), for the appellant, contended that the court below was wrong in law in holding that the appellant was a joint decree-holder with Musammat Najm-un-nissa. The decree was not an indivisible decree but the two portions could be separated. Najm-un-nissa could have taken out execution of the decree for costs only and there was no bar to her transferee doing the same. The decree for costs had been passed personally against the heirs of Farzand Ali and Najm-un-nissa could have asked for the execution of that decree by arrest of [205] those persons while in respect of her decree for dower the assets of Farzand Ali in the hands of his heirs were liable. If, therefore, Najm-un-nissa could have taken out execution separately for the two portions of the decree in her favour, her transferee, who obtained no interest in the portion of the decree relating to dower could, without any legal bar, have certainly done so.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the respondents, submitted that order XXI, rule 16, contemplated that the whole decree or the whole of the interest of the joint decree-holder could be transferred. But if it was held that a portion of a decree or a portion of the interest of a joint decree-holder could be legally transferred, even then, when execution was taken out, it could be so done in respect of the whole decree only and not of a portion. In the present case the decree was for a sum of money and it could not be split up in such a way that a portion could be executed at one time and another portion at a different time.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh, in reply, argued that a "decree" in order XXI, rule 16, meant the decree that was transferred, which might be the whole or a part of it. By virtue of the transfer Ram Chandra Naik Kalia did not become a joint decree-holder. For a joint decree-holder meant the holder of a decree who had an interest in every bit of that decree. In the present case the appellant had no interest at all in the decree for dower. The decree in which he had an interest he had executed in full, so that there was no question of the decree being executed piecemeal. The principle upon which one joint decree-holder was not allowed to execute his share only of the decree was that the court had to safeguard the interest of the other decree-holders. In this case the interest of no one had to be safe-guarded. What the transferee could execute he did and the matter ended there.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—This appeal arises out of the following circumstances:—Musammat Najm-un-nissa, the widow of one Maulvi Farzand Ali, brought a suit against the other heirs of her deceased husband to recover a sum of Rs. 97,500 due to her as dower. She also asked for the costs of her suit. The District Judge decreed the claim in her favour. The judgment ends as follows:—"I, therefore, decree the claim in full with costs and future interest [206] at 6 per cent. per annum. The decree will be executed against the assets of Maulvi Farzand Ali, and not against the personal property of the defendants". This was also entered in the decree. The defendants appealed to this court. But the appeal was dismissed with costs. There was no order in the decree of this Court as to the realization of the costs of this Court from the assets of the deceased. Musammat Najm-un-nissa has transferred to the present appellant her right to recover costs as against her judgment-debtors. The present appellant applied to the District Judge for execution of so much of the decree as related to costs. Objection was taken, first of all as to the right of the appellant as transferee of a part of the decree to put a portion of the decree into execution, and next it was also objected that the costs could only be recovered from the assets of the deceased Farzand Ali. The lower court has held on a construction of the decrees that the costs incurred by the plaintiff in the High Court are recoverable from the persons and other property of the defendants; that the costs incurred in the court of first instance are only recoverable from the assets of the deceased, and thirdly, that the appellant was not in law entitled to apply as a transferee of a part of the decree for execution of that portion only. The transferee has come here on appeal, and it is urged that the District Judge has misconstrued the decree and that he has erred in law in holding that the appellant as a transferee of a part of the decree could not put that portion of the decree into execution. In so far as the construction of the decree is concerned, in our opinion the District Judge is perfectly correct. As regards the second point, assuming that there is nothing in law to prevent the transfer of a portion of the decree, and assuming that the transferee can apply for the execution of the whole decree, in the present case the transferee is not entitled to apply for execution of a part of the decree, as the original decree-holder herself could not have done so. The decree appears to us to be one and indivisible, for recovery of the dower plus the costs incurred in the suit. We do not think that the bare fact of a portion of the sum decreed being recoverable only from the assets of the deceased makes the decree one which could be divided into two separate decrees with regard to which the decree-holder will be entitled to execute separately. Rule 16 of order XXI lays down distinctly that in cases of [207] transfer the decree can be executed in the same manner and subject to the same condition as if the application were made by such decree-holder. In our opinion the application was properly disallowed and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THIS was a suit for sale on a mortgage bond, dated the 9th of February, 1891, executed by Dorab Singh, father of the defendants appellants. The mortgagee was one Sham Lal, the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs respondents. The mortgage was made for Rs. 33,500. The consideration for the bond was Rs. 5,000, alleged to have been due on account at the date of the mortgage, plus Rs. 6,500 calculated as interest in advance, and a balance of Rs. 22,000 paid in cash. This principal amount was made payable by instalments extending over 16 years; no further interest was to be charged except in case of default in payment of instalments. The Rs. 5,000 due on account had been advanced more than 20 years before the date of mortgage. The court of first instance gave a decree for the full amount. The defendants appealed, in regard to the item of Rs. 5,000, the claim for which was alleged to have been long time-barred.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru with him), for the appellants :—

The question is whether a Hindu father could revive a time-barred debt. He could not mortgage ancestral property for such debts : Indar Singh v. Sarju Singh (2). A time-barred debt could not be acknowledged under the Statute of Limitations. A Hindu father could only alienate property for legal necessity : ordinarily speaking, [208] he could not borrow to add to family property. The mortgagee had to prove that the debt incurred was for family necessity and if the debt was time-barred, it could not be enforced against the family. Revival of a debt was not a family necessity and it was not permissible for a father or manager to revive such debts. There was a difference between reviving a debt and acknowledging a debt ; Gopal Narain Mozoomdar v. Muddomutty Guptee (3), Chinnaya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (4) and Dinkar v. Appaji (5). The lower court had relied on Narayanasami Chetti v. Samidas Mudali (6), but an obligation to pay the debt did not help the plaintiff ; he had to show that the debt was one which could be enforced.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, (Pandit Rama Kant Malaviya with him), for the respondents :—

The question is was the transaction to the advantage of the family. Money was advanced at an exceptionally low rate of interest. He could not get such easy terms if he had not revived the time-barred debt. The revival of the debt was therefore a family necessity. The debt was one which was enforceable against the father. It was an antecedent debt and as such the question of legal necessity does not arise. A son's liability to pay his father's debt is a pious obligation and is independent of the rule of limitation. The principle on which he has been made liable is entirely different—the idea being that he would suffer for the debts elsewhere if he did not discharge them in this world.

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J. :—This appeal arises out of a suit brought on foot of a mortgage, dated the 9th of February, 1891. The mortgage was admittedly made by the father of a joint Hindu family. The consideration for the mortgage was a sum of Rs. 5,000 alleged to be due on account at the date of the mortgage, a sum of Rs. 6,500 representing interest calculated in advance, and Rs. 22,000 cash advanced to enable the mortgagor to purchase certain immovable property. The principal amount was made repayable by instalments extending over sixteen years. The court below has given a decree for Rs. 27,926-1-0.

[209] The question which has been urged before us in the present appeal is that the sum of Rs. 5,000, assuming it ever to have been a debt at all, was at the time of the execution of the mortgage time-barred, and that, therefore, it was not permissible for the mortgagor, as the father and manager of the joint Hindu family, to revive a time-barred debt and to create a mortgage for such time-barred debt on the family property. A ground was no doubt taken in the memorandum of appeal that on the evidence the Court should not have held that there was any debt at all. In our opinion we ought to have no hesitation in accepting the finding of the court below that the debt was an honest debt, but that it was time-barred at the time of the execution of the mortgage.

The case resolves itself then into a question of law, namely, whether or not the father of a joint Hindu family can legally revive a time-barred debt and bind the family property to secure its repayment. Having regard to the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in the case of Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Prasad (1) it seems to us that we must find the existence of family necessity before we can hold the family property bound. It is very difficult to say that there would ever be any necessity for the father or manager of the family to revive a time-barred debt. Prima facie and looked at from a worldly point of view it is very much against the interest of the family to revive such a debt. The very question was decided by a Bench of this Court in the case of Indar Singh v. Sarju Singh (2). It has been contended before us that we ought to hold, under the circumstances of the present case, that it was in the interest of the family that the time-barred debt should be revived. It is urged that the money was advanced upon very easy terms, and that, therefore we should hold that the money could not have been obtained except on the condition of reviving the debt. In our opinion there is no sufficient evidence on the record to show that it was for the benefit of the family that the time-barred debt of Rs. 5,000 should be revived.

It has also been contended that the father, even if he could not bind his sons, could bind himself, and that, therefore the payments which he made should be considered as payments made in respect of his interest in the property. We do not consider that this [210] argument is sound. In our opinion the payments which were made must be attributed to payments made upon foot of the mortgage to the extent for which it was a good and valid mortgage, that is to say, to the extent of the family necesstiy proved. There is nothing to show that the payments were made by the father out of separate funds.

Under these circumstances we would have been quite prepared to have excluded the sum of Rs. 5,000 from the mortgage and dealt with the mortgage as if it had been made for an advance of Rs. 22,000 and no more. If we did this, however, we certainly should give the mortgagee interest upon Rs. 22,000, or so much thereof as for the time being remained unpaid, at a reasonable rate. We think under the circumstances that nine per cent. per annum would not be an excessive rate of interest. In the mortgage deed itself it was agreed that interest at that rate should be paid on overdue instalments. We find, however, that if we were to treat the mortgage as a mortgage for Rs. 22,000 only and calculated interest at the rate of nine per cent. (allowing the mortgagors credit for any sums where the instalments which were paid were more than sufficient to keep down interest) the amount due on such calculation would admittedly exceed the amount of the decree of the court below. Under these circumstances we see no reason whatever for interfering with the decree of the court below, and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs. The decree will carry future interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the date of the decree of the court below. To this extent we allow the respondent's objection. We extend the time for payment for six months from this date.

(1) (1909) I. L. R. 31 All. 176.

(2) (1911) 8 A. L. J. 1099.

SKINNER (Plaintiff) v. NAUNIHAL SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants) AND 10 OTHER APPEALS, 11 APPEALS CONSOLIDATED.*

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad.]

[4th and 5th February and 4th March, 1913.]

Will—Construction of will—Rule of justice, equity and good conscience—Devise to eldest son and his lawful male children according to law of inheritance—Mortgages made by testator as full owner and mortgages made by son with an estate for life only—Rights of mortgagees—Alternative case set up on appeal—Costs.

T. S., a domiciled resident of the North-Western Provinces of India, died on the 9th of November, 1864, leaving a will, dated the 22nd of October, 1864, [and therefore before the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) came into force] whereby he made provision that certain villages, houses and other property should "at my demise descend to my eldest son T. B. S. and to his lawful male children according to the law of inheritance, and in the event of my eldest son T. B. S. dying without lawful male children, to my female children, or in the event of their death to the female children born in wedlock of my sons in succession." The testator had in 1863 mortgaged his property to the extent of Rs 50,000 with interest, and his son T B S, after he succeeded to the property, further mortgaged it in 1867, 1869 and 1872, and in execution of decrees obtained against him on those mortgages the property was sold and his interest therein was acquired by the various auction purchasers. T. B. S. died in 1900 without lawful male children and was succeeded by the second son of the testator, the present appellant, who in 1905 and 1906 brought the present suits for ejectment against the auction puchasers, in which he prayed for decrees for "full proprietary possession" and the suits were dealt with on that footing in the Courts in India, the High Court, however, only dismissing the suits because there was no specific claim for redemption. On his appeal part of the appellant's case was that the High Court, instead of dismissing the suits, should have made decrees for possession conditional upon payment of the debts binding on the etate of the testator; and during the hearing it was conceded by counsel that on the construction of the will the appellant was only a life-tenant of the property.

Held that the regulation of the succession under the will was to be determined by the rule of "justice, equity and good conscience;" that the bequest was to be read in its entirety and together, and that so read there was in it no intention that his son T. B S. should have an absolute ownership: the testator intended to regulate the succession after the death of T. B. S and settle the mode of the subsequent enjoyment of the property, and such detailed regulations were only natural, necessary and entirely in place if T. B. S. was intended to be merely a tenant for life.

Held, therefore, that the rights under mortgages granted by T. B. S. ceased at his death, and that the appellant, as the next male heir, was entitled to the enjoyment of the estate for life free from any rights so acquired. The case, however, was very different with regard to the rights acquired under mortgages [212] granted by the testator himself. Even if T. B. S. renewed such mortgages, the right of the mortgagees would not be prejudiced thereby, the renewal of a mortgage by a person with a limited interest in the estate not operating as a discharge of debts effectually secured upon the radical right. The appellant accordingly was not entitled to possession until full satisfaction had been made of the rights of all mortgagees and their successors under mortgages granted by the testator. The appeals were allowed and the suits remitted to the High Court on that footing.

The alternative case set up by the appellant on appeal was only permitted by their Lordships to be the ground of judgment, because it seemed possible in that way to construct the material for a just decision of the true rights of the parties concerned, which would be best for the interests of all, and prevent further litigation.

ELEVEN consolidated appeals 95 and 97 to 106 of 1911 from judgments and decrees (2nd March 1909) of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, which reversed judgments and decrees (26th March 1907) of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut.

The suits which gave rise to these appeals were brought to recover possession with mesne profits of certain villages in the district of Bulandshahr in the United Provinces, most of which were granted by the Government of India as a reward for good service to one Thomas Skinner, and all of which formed part of his estate on his death.

He died in November, 1864, leaving a will, dated the 22nd October, 1864, by which, together with other property, all the above-mentioned villages were bequeathed " to my eldest son Thomas Brown Skinner and to his lawful male children according to the law of inheritance, " and " in the event of my eldest son Thomas Brown Skinner dying without lawful male children the above-mentioned property shall descend to my next male heir. "

The material clauses of the will are set out in full in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee.

Thomas Brown Skinner died on the 3rd of July, 1900, without lawful male children, and was succeeded by the appellant Richard Ross Skinner, the second son of the testator.

Thomas Skinner (the testator) had on the 1st of September, 1863, mortgaged the villages in dispute to the firm of Seth Lakhmi Chand and Seth Govind Das as security for a loan of Rs. 50,000, with interest at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem. The mortgagor undertook to pay off the amount of the loan with [213] interest at the end of December 1863, and stipulated that if he failed to do so, he would put the mortgagees in possession in order that they might be able to realize the amount due on the mortgage themselves. He died, however, without having redeemed the mortgage.

On the death of Thomas Skinner the Court of Wards took possession of his estate, and in 1867 made over possession of it to Thomas Brown Skinner, who was entered in the revenue registers as the proprietor of the villages. Thomas Brown Skinner put the Seths in possession of the mortgaged property under the deed of 1863, on which, on the 10th of November, 1867, there was due the sum of Rs. 43,294, and under a mortgage of that date he borrowed a further sum from them on the security of the same villages. Subsequently he took other loans on the same security from the same mortgagees under deeds of the 9th of October, 1869, and the 7th February, 1872. Part of the latter sums borrowed were to discharge debts of his father.

The property in dispute was sold in execution of decrees obtained against Thomas Brown Skinner, his equity of redemption being sold on the 20th of December, 1872, in the following villages under a decree obtained by Durga Prasad and Sri Ram, dated the 28th of August, 1871: Hirdeypur, purchased by Durga Prasad; Neknampur, Saonli, Raja Rampur Dolai Rajpur, and Kishanpur, purchased by Seth Lachman Das and under the same decree his equity of redemption was, on the 20th of February, 1873, sold in Gangapur, Mathrapur, and Mandpa, and purchased by Lal Singh and Kishan Singh.

Under a decree obtained by Gorakh Ram and Gauri Dat, dated the 19th of September, 1871, the equity of redemption of Thomas Brown Skinner was sold in Gangola on the 20th of September, 1872, and in Salehpur on the 20th of December, 1872, both purchased by Seth Lachman Das.

In execution of a decree of Jauhari Mal and Ram Prasad, and of the decree of Gorakh Ram and Gauri Dat his equity of redemption was on the 20th of December, 1872, sold in the villages of Sunperha, purchased by Seth Lachman Das, and Ainchar (two lots of 15 biswas and 5 biswas) purchased by the decree-holders: and in execution of a decree of Waris Ali and Pitambar, the decree of [214] Gorakh Ram and Gauri Dat, and the decree of Jaudhari Mal and Ram Prasad his equity of redemption in the village of Ghori Bachera was sold on the 20th of December, 1872, and purchased by Seth Lachman Das.

The auction-purchasers abovementioned were the defendants in the eleven suits brought on various dates between the 25th of August, 1905, and the 2nd of July, 1906, by the appellant Richard Ross Skinner, in which he alleged his title under the will of Thomas Skinner, and claimed decrees for proprietary possession of the villages comprised in the various suits with mesne profits on the ground that Thomas Brown Skinner only had under the will a life-interest in the villages, and consequently the auction-purchasers had by the sales acquired only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, namely an estate for his life.

The several defendants in the suits set out their respective titles claiming to be absolutely entitled to the lands respectively under the mortgages and sales abovementioned. They asserted that Thomas Brown Skinner, if he took under the alleged will, which they did not admit, took an absolute estate, and not an estate for life only; and that the plaintiff could not recover on the footing of the will until probate of it had been duly obtained. It was further pleaded that the possession of Thomas Brown Skinner and of those claiming under him was adverse to the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct from denying that Thomas Brown Skinner was the absolute owner of the villages; and that in any case the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief he sought.

Issues were raised, on which the Subordinate Judge, so far as is material in these appeals, held that Thomas Skinner did make the will, dated the 22nd of October, 1864; that, following a previous decision of the High Court in 1904 in the case of Skinner v. Durga Parsad (1), Thomas Brown Skinner took only a life estate and not an absolute estate in the property; that the taking out of probate was not necessary; that Thomas Skinner had encumbered the property by the mortgage of 1863; that Thomas Brown Skinner created the fresh encumbrances mentioned; but that they did not operate as a discharge of the mortgage bond executed by Thomas Skinner [215] in 1863; that all the defendants were in possession as the representatives of the original auction purchasers, who had acquired merely the equity of redemption of Thomas Brown Skinner, and were not entitled to be reimbursed; and that no question of adverse possession arose. In the result he gave decrees for possession to the plaintiff with mesne profits.

Appeals by the defendants were preferred and the High Court (Sir John Stanley, C. J. and Banerji, J.) reversed the decisions of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suits.

In appeal 95 the High Court took the findings of the Subordinate Judge on the questions involved in the will and as to the nature of the estate taken by Thomas Brown Skinner to be correct, but allowed the appeal on the ground that the mortgage of 1863 entitled the mortgagees to retain possession of the property as security for the amount due upon it, and therefore, without redeeming it, the plaintiff was not entitled to dispossess the mortgagees or their representatives. As no specific claim for redemption had been advanced, the High Court refused to direct an account of the rents and profits and dismissed the suits.

The material portion of the judgment was as follows :—

"It was contended on behalf of the defendants in the Court below that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover possession of the property in suit unless he first redeem the mortgage made in favour of the Seths on the 1st of September, 1863. This contention was overruled by the learned Subordinate Judge on the ground that the aforesaid mortgage was only a simple hypothecation and did not give to the mortgagees the right to obtain possession, 'or prevent the rightful owner from getting possession of the property as owner without immediately discharging that mortgage debt.' In this view the learned Subordinate Judge was in our opinion in error. As we have pointed out above, the mortgage of 1863 provided that in default of payment of principal and interest according to the stipulation contained in the mortgage-deed, the mortgagor would put the mortgagees into possession of the mortgaged property. Although the mortgagees did not take possession at the time, there can be no doubt that when the subsequent mortgage of the 10th of November, 1867, was executed possession was surrendered to the mortgagees in accordance with the stipulation contained in the earlier document. The mortgagees or their representatives are admittedly in possession of the mortgaged property, and their possession must be treated, we think, as referable to the stipulation contained in the mortgage of 1863, which gave them a right to possession. The mortgage of 1867 did not supersede and extinguish in toto the mortgage of 1863. On the contrary, that mortgage must be regarded, we think, as a subsisting mortgage and as such entitling the mortgagees to retain possession as against any person claiming title through [216] the original mortgagor as security for the amount due upon that mortgage. In this view, until the mortgage of 1863 has been redeemed, the plaintiff is in no event, whatever be his title, entitled to dispossess the mortgagees or their representatives. Whether Kunwar Naunihal Singh is the person solely entitled to remain in possession, or whether the Seths are also so entitled, there can be no doubt that one of them has the right to remain in possession so long as the mortgage of 1863 is subsisting.

"Therefore until the plaintiff redeems the said mortgage, he is not entitled to obtain possession of the property in question. In this suit there is no claim for redemption Had such a claim been put forward, it would have been necessary to take an account of the rents and profits for the purpose of determining whether any and what amount is due upon the said mortgage. But, as we have said above, no such claim was advanced, and we do not think the plaintiff is entitled in this suit to ask that an account be taken from the defendants and a decree be made for redemption. (See Murugaser Marimuttu v. De Soysa (1)."

Appeal 95 of 1911 related to the villages of Neknampur, Salehpur, Sunperha, Gangola and Ghori Bachera purchased by Seth Lachman Das.

Appeals 98 (relating to the village of Hirdeypur, purchased by Durga Prasad and Sri Ram in execution of their own decree), 99 (relating to the village of Kishanpur purchased by Seth Lachman Das in execution of Durga Prasad's decree and sold by him to the present respondents), 100 (relating to the village of Saonli), 101 (relating to the village of Dolai Rajpur), 102 (relating to the village of Raja Rampur), 103 (relating to the village of Mandpa), 105 (relating to the village of Mathrapur), and 106 (relating to the village of Gangapur) were held to be governed by the same considerations as appeal 95, and they were also allowed and the plaintiff's suits dismissed.

In appeals 97 (relating to a 15 biswa share in the village of Ainchar), and 104 (relating to a 5 biswa share in the village of Ainchar) the defendants were held by the High Court entitled to retain possession until the mortgage redeemed by them had been discharged, notwithstanding their right to possession was referable to the purchase at auction sale of the right, title and interest of Thomas Brown Skinner, the tenant for life. In those also, therefore, the plaintiff's suits were dismissed.

On these appeals —

De Gruyther, K. C. and G. C. O'Gorman, for the appellants, relied on the judgment of the Subordinate Judge on all matters [217] connected with the will of Thomas Skinner, and it was contended that Thomas Brown Skinner had only a life-interest in the property ; and that consequently the auction purchasers of property sold under mortgages made by him acquired merely his right, title and interest, which ceased at his death. The mortgages executed by Thomas Brown Skinner in favour of the predecessors in title of the respondents bound only his own interests, and, it was submitted, operated as a discharge of any previous mortgage executed by Thomas Skinner. Seth Lachman Das, therefore, was not entitled to possession as against the appellant ; but even if he were so entitled, purchasers from him, and persons who subsequently redeemed specific villages from him, had no such right to possession. As to Durga Prasad, all questions relating to him were res judicata. It was contended accordingly that the appellant was entitled to an absolute estate in the properties in suit and that the High Court had been wrong in not affirming the decrees for proprietary possession given to the appellant by the Subordinate Judge. In any event the High Court should not have dismissed the suits, but should have passed decrees for possession conditional upon payment of the debts binding on the estate of Thomas Skinner. If their Lordships were against the claim of the appellant to proprietary possession, that might be done now.

Sir Earle Richards K. C. and Kenworthy Brown, for the respondents in appeals 95, 99, 100 and 102, contended that under clause 4 of the will Thomas Brown Skinner took an absolute estate. The words of the will "to him and to his lawful male children according to the law of inheritance," would have given him under section 84 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) an estate in fee, that is, the whole estate of the testator, in the property. That section introduced the English law, see illustration (a) to that section. The Succession Act, however, did not apply because the will was made, and the testator died, in 1864 ; see section 331 of the Act. But the law as it existed in India before the Succession Act would on the true construction of those words have given him an absolute estate. The case should be decided by the rule of justice, equity and good conscience. Reference was made to Barlow v. Orde (1). [218] If the construction of the will in the case of Skinner v. Durga Prasad (2) followed by the Subordinate Judge is held to be the correct one, namely, that Thomas Brown Skinner took only an estate for life, then on the same construction the appellant has only a life estate also. The High Court, it was submitted, had put a reasonable construction on the will. There was no offer made in the pleadings or in the lower courts to pay off the amounts due on the mortgages. The mortgage of 1863 did not become discharged or extinguished on the execution of the mortgages subsequently made by Thomas Brown Skinner: the intention was not to do that: Gokal Das Gopal Das v. Puranmal Prem Sukh Das (3) was referred to. The appellant had no right or title to any of the lands in dispute in these appeals, as on the right construction of the will—that Thomas Brown Skinner had an absolute estate—the appellant had no interest under it. Thomas Brown Skinner was always treated by the appellant, and by every one as being in possession as absolute owner. At any rate, if the appellant is held entitled to succeed in these suits, it should be subject to his paying off the mortgages due on the property in suit. Reference was made to Murugaser Marimuttu v. De Soysa (4), a somewhat similar case to the present. If the cases are sent back the Nawab of Rampur should be joined as a party.

W. A. Raikes for the respndents in appeal 101 contended that the appellant had not proved his title under the will, so as to enable him to maintain the suit. After the sale of the 20th of December, 1872, Seth Lachman Das and after him the respondent became absolute owners of the property. On the proper construction of the will Thomas Brown Skinner became absolute owner of the property, and could in any case bind it as against the reversioners. The suit, moreover, was barred by limitation. This respondent was a mortgagee of Thomas Skinner, and under a usufructuary mortgage he had been in possession for more than 60 years, and his possession had been adverse from 1832. He purchased the equity of redemption of the village of Dolai Rajpur, the subject of this appeal. Reference was made to Mataḍin Kasodhan v. Kazim Husain (5). The clauses of the will should [219] be read subject to any claim of adverse possession. In any case the appellant could not succeed during the existence of the mortgage of 1863.

B. Dube for the respondents in appeals 97, 103, 104 and 106 contended with respect to 97 and 104 that the appellant had not proved his title; that he had never offered to redeem the property; and that in any case he was liable to discharge the incumbrances created by Thomas Skinner and Thomas Brown Skinner before recovering the villages in suit; and, as to all the appeals, that the High Court was right,

J. M. Parikh and J. R. Roy for the respondents in appeals 98 and 105 contended that on the proper construction of the will Thomas Brown Skinner took an absolute estate in the property in suit; and that the appellant was not in any event entitled to recover possession of the property until he redeemed the mortgage of 1863.

Lordships were of opinion on the construction of the will that Thomas Brown Skinner took only a life estate under it, he would concede that the appellant took under the will no greater interest than that, and would ask to be allowed to redeem the incumbrances created by Thomas Skinner the testator : reference was made to the Civil Procedure Code, 1882 (Ameer Ali and Woodroffe), page 683, where all the cases are collected relating to granting relief.

1913, March 4th :—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Lord SHAW : —

These are consolidated appeals from eleven judgments and decrees of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad. The suits were for ejectment and were brought by the present appellant Richard Ross Skinner. The Subordinate Judge of Meerut passed ejectment decrees and the appellant was granted absolute proprietary possession, with mense profits, of certain villages situated in the district of Bulandshahr in the United Provinces. These judgments and decrees of the Subordinate Judge were reversed by the High Court.

[220] In the proceedings before the Subordinate Judge many issues were taken and questions investigated and discussed.

With the exception of those to be hereafter referred to, it is unnecessary to enter upon these questions. For, as the result of the discussion before the Board, the appellant made a concession, which was (whatever may have been the nature of the other discussions before the Courts below) no part of his original pleadings or case. In the plaint he prayed " that a decree for full proprietary possession of the entire villages . . . be granted to the plaintiff. He further prayed for mesne profits and for costs of the suit, with interest upon these mesne profits up to the date of realization. It is true that the plaint also concluded " that any further relief which may be considered desirable and necessary be granted to the plaintiff," but, in their Lordships' opinion, this conclusion was treated by the plaintiff himself throughout the proceedings as merely ancillary to or consequential upon the radical demand he made for " full proprietary possession." The case in the Courts of India was throughout conducted upon the footing that he was entitled to this proprietary possession in a full and unconditional sense, that is to say, that any mortgages or duly constituted burdens granted even by Thomas Skinner over the properties were to be treated as wholly unavailing against him. Under the decree obtained no such rights were recognized. His position, in short, was that the whole of these burdens and mortgages might be ignored.

When, however, the case for the appellant to this Board was drawn, an alternative view was submitted, which is contained in the seventh reason. That reason was in this form :—" In any event the High Court of Judicature, Allahabad, should not have dismissed the suits, but should have passed decrees for possession conditional upon the payment of the debts binding on the estate of Thomas Skinner."

Their Lordships are of opinion that this case was never either openly or fully set up by the appellant before the Indian Courts, and that great embarrassment to the learned Judges therein, and great delay and loss, have ensued to the respondents by reason of the appellant's action in this regard. The Board has experienced considerable difficulty in permitting the alternative to be the ground [221] of judgment now; and it is only because, in their view, it may be possible, out of a large wreckage of procedure, to construct the material for a just decision of the true rights of the parties, and because upon the whole this may be in the parties' own best interests, that their Lordships refrain from simpliciter sustaining the appeals and dismissing the suits.

The villages were the property of one Thomas Skinner, a member of a family not unknown in the history of the North-Western Provinces. In 1863 Thomas Skinner mortgaged, inter alia, these villages for a sum of Rs. 50,000, with interest.

It is unnecessary to refer to other mortgages than that of the year 1863, which has just been mentioned, for the principles of the judgment which is to follow are meant to apply comprehensively to the mortgages granted by Thomas Skinner. Detailed reference need not, therefore, be made, for instance, to the mortgage of 1861 granted by him over the village of Ainchar to secure a sum of Rs. 4,000. On the 7th of September of that year this village was mortgaged to the Collector of Bulandshahr. The plaintiff's claim to this village, as to the other villages, has been dismissed. But although this procedure is to be corrected as the result of the judgment of this Board, their Lordships are entirely of the opinion expressed in the judgment of the High Court of date the 2nd March, 1909, to the effect that "the plaintiff is not entitled to oust the appellant without payment of the amount which the predecessors in title of the appellant paid in discharge of the mortgage in favour of the Collector."

The mortgage deed of 1863 above mentioned provided that the mortgagees should be put in possession if principal and interest were not paid in accordance with the terms. On the 22nd of October, 1864, Thomas Skinner executed a will. In the next month, namely, November, 1864, he died. Under his will an important question to be immediately referred to arises as to what was the nature of the right conferred in the villages upon his son.

That son, Thomas Brown Skinner, had possession delivered to him in the year 1867 by the Court of Wards. At that time the Board were informed that there was due, on the mortgage for Rs. 50,000, granted by his father, Thomas Skinner, a sum of Rs. 43,000. The mortgagees were placed in possession by him, [222] and he also himself borrowed further sums in that year, in 1869 and in 1872, and granted mortgages over the properties therefor. In 1872 Lachman Das purchased at a sale, in execution of decrees obtained against Thomas Brown Skinner, the right under the mortgages both of the father, Thomas Skinner, in 1863, and of the son, Thomas Brown Skinner, in 1869 and 1872. Other transactions and some transmissions took place with regard to the villages, but these need not be entered upon. From this main sketch it is to be observed generally that Thomas Brown Skinner had in point of fact acted, as all parties to the transactions appear to have acted, on the footing that he was the owner of the father Thomas Skinner's estate in the villages, and was the absolute owner. If this was the true view, all questions in the case are at an end, and the suit for possession must entirely fail. How does this question stand?

This depends upon the construction to be given to two clauses of destination occurring in Thomas Skinner's will of 1864. They are in these terms:—

> "(4) That my private zamindari presented to me by Government as a reward for services rendered during the rebellion of 1857, as well as all villages, houses and other property added by me from time to time to the original grant may, at my demise, descend to my eldest son, Thomas Brown Skinner, and to his lawful male children according to the law of inheritance.

" (5) In the event of my eldest son, Thomas Brown Skinner, dying without lawful male children, the abovementioned private zamindari, &c., shall descend to my next male heir, and should all my sons die without lawful male children, the zamindari, &c., shall descend to my female children, or, in the event of their death, to the female children born in wedlock of my sons in succession."

It is strenuously contended that under this destination Thomas Brown Skinner (who, it may be mentioned, was an illegitimate child, and who was, at the date of his father's death, about fourteen years of age) took an absolute estate as contradistinguished from an estate [223] for his life. Reference is made to the Succession Act, section 84, which provides that "where property is bequeathed to a person, and words are added which describe a class of persons, but do not denote them as direct objects of a distinct and independent gift, such person is entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein, unless a contrary intention appears by the will;" and one of the illustrations in the section is specially founded upon, namely, "to A. and the heirs male of his body." The Act was passed in the year 1865. By section 331 of the Act it is enacted that "the provisions of this Act shall not apply . . . to any will made or any intestacy occurring before the first day of January, 1866." But, as stated, Thomas Skinner the testator died in 1864. It is contended, however, that although this may be so, yet, according to the law of India, prior to the enactment of that Act, a destination to "Thomas Brown Skinner and to his lawful male children according to the law of inheritance" was, in point of fact, an effective form of conveyance of no less than absolute ownership.

In determining this question it is the opinion of their Lordships that the destination must be read in its entirety and together. Following the words quoted there occur these :—"In the event of my eldest son, Thomas Brown Skinner, dying without lawful male children, the abovementioned private zamindari, &c.. shall descend to my next male heir." The argument of Richard Ross Skinner, who, in point of fact, was the next male heir, is that his brother, Thomas Brown Skinner, had only the interest of a tenant for life. On reading still further on in the destination it is found that the appellant is not entitled himself, if his own argument be sound, to the position of absolute owner, for the destination continues: "And should all my sons die without lawful male children, the zamindari, &c., shall descend to my female children, or in the event of their death, to the female children born in wedlock of my sons in succession." His learned counsel accordingly conceded that the appellant is, as was his brother before him, only a tenant for life. The event has not yet been ascertained whether the appellant shall or shall not die without lawful male children. If there should be such children, no doubt they would be the absolute owners of the properties, but if he should die childless, then the destination over to female children will, it is argued, take place.

[224] The question is full of embarrassment and difficulty. It is no doubt a temptation to be rid of the troublesome issues, with consequent accountings, by holding that the absolute ownership was in Thomas Brown Skinner; but—for this temptation must be put aside—the only question that their Lordships have to consider is whether it was the testamentary intention of Thomas Skinner, under the form of language adopted, to create by his will an absolute ownership in Thomas Brown Skinner. From the case of Barlow v. Orde (1) (in which, it may be observed, the history of the Skinner family is referred to in a judgment of Lord Westbury) it is plain that English rules of interpretation—in so far at least as these are artificial rules of construction which have arisen in the administration of English Courts of Equity—must not be allowed to govern the interpretation of Thomas Skinner's will. Questions affecting the construction of such a settlement as the present, or the regulation of a succession under it, must be determined by the principles of natural justice, or, to use the familiar language, according to "justice, equity and good conscience."

So, looking at this settlement, their Lordships do not find themselves able to affirm that Thomas Skinner meant his son Thomas Brown Skinner to have an absolute ownership of these villages. So to conclude, would be to affirm that the former a month before his death set forth an elaborate scheme of destinations over, while all the time he was really meaning that the boy of fourteen was to take the absolute ownership if he survived him. If the son was to be a tenant for life merely, then the detailed regulations for successive enjoyment and descent were entirely in place; they were natural and necessary. There are considerations either way; but it seems to their Lordships a more likely and more reasonable conclusion to come to, that Thomas Skinner did mean to regulate the succession after the death of his son, and addressed his mind to the consideration of what should be the steps and order of that subsequent enjoyment of his property. In their Lordships opinion accordingly, the possession of Thomas Brown Skinner of these villages was the possession of a tenant for life.

It follows that the mortgages granted by Thomas Brown Skinner were ineffectual to convey or give any rights over any [225] estate exceeding the tenancy for life of which Thomas Brown Skinner was possessed. The appellant, accordingly, as the next male heir, is entitled to the enjoyment of this estate for life, as of an estate out of the corpus of which no rights could issue which proceeded from Thomas Brown Skinner, and that the respondents, in so far as they represent such rights and the succession thereto have no title to interfere with his entry into possession.

But the case, in their Lordships' view, stands in a very different position with regard to the rights of mortgagees and their successors under mortgages granted, not by the appellant's brother, but by the appellant's father, Thomas Skinner. With regard to the appellant's brother, it is decided by this judgment that the estate which he possessed was that of a tenant for life, and that mortgages proceeding in respect of debts incurred by him could not affect the estate beyond his life. Even if it be supposed that after he, Thomas Brown Skinner, came into possession he granted mortgages in renewal of those granted by his father and then outstanding, the rights of the mortgagees could not in justice or equity be prejudiced thereby. To do so would be to operate a substantial defeat of the rights of those mortgagees and to imply, what certainly never was the intention of any of the parties to the transaction, that by the renewal of a mortgage by a person with a limited interest in the estate the intention was to operate a discharge of debts effectually secured upon the radical right.

Their Lordships, accordingly, have little difficulty in holding that such a result must be avoided, that full effect must be given to the mortgages granted by Thomas Skinner, and that the appellant can only enter upon possession of his rights qua tenant for life of these villages now after satisfying the mortgage debts of his father upon the estate. Their Lordships are glad to observe that the substance of this equity is fully recognized in the judgment appealed from. They express no surprise, looking to the state of the pleadings, and particularly to the unqualified nature of the demand made in the plaint, that these learned Judges should have dismissed the same simpliciter, and they view the judgment of the High Court as meant to leave open the determination of the rights of the mortgagees of Thomas Skinner and their successors in some further suit or suits.

[226] Upon the whole, however, it does not appear to their Lordships that justice will be done between these parties if the present suit be dismissed, with the prospect of further litigations to determine a matter now substantially ripe for settlement. They are further of opinion that the appellant is not entitled, even under the present suit, to enter into possession until full satisfaction is first made of the rights of all mortgagees and their successors under the mortgage deeds granted by Thomas Skinner. Should this condition be not, within what appears to the Court below to be a proper and sufficient time, satisfied, then in their Lordships' opinion a decree dismissing the suit in respect of this failure could then be pronounced.

Had the condition of a grant of possession which was conceded at their Lordships' Bar been made upon the plaint or the pleadings in the Court below, the whole of the protracted litigation would have been saved, except to the extent of a simple determination of the point of the construction of Thomas Skinner's will.

In their Lordships' opinion, accordingly, justice to the parties will be most nearly approached if the appellant make payment to the respondents of the costs of the proceedings in both Courts of India, and if, in regard to the appeal before this Board, neither party be found entitled to costs. Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals should be allowed, that the causes should be remitted to the High Court to be dealt with upon the footing that the rights under mortgages granted by the late Thomas Skinner should be satisfied by payment being made to the mortgagees or their successors, that upon these payments being made and that within such reasonable time as shall be fixed in the Court below, a decree for possession shall be pronounced in favour of the appellant, and that, failing such payment within such time, the suits shall stand dismissed.

SONI RAM (Plaintiff) v. KANHAIYA LAL (Defendant).*

[On Appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad.]

[6th February and 6th March, 1913.]

Act No. XV of 1877 (Indian Limitation Act), section 19 and schedule II, article 148—Acknowledgment. effect of—Acknowledgment by widow in possession of husband's estate—Suspension of limitation—Act XV of 1877, section 9—Act XIV of 1859 section 1, clause 15—Res judicata—Contentions raised for the first time on appeal to His Majesty in Council—Practice of Privy Council.

In a suit brought by the appellant on the 4th of March, 1907, against the respondents for the redemption of a mortgage, dated the 2nd of January, 1842, made between the respective predecessors in title of the parties and in which no date for redemption was specified, acknowledgments of the mortgagor's right had been made by the widow and daughter of a former mortgagee, a predecessor in title of the respondents, which, the appellants contended, extended the period of limitation.

Held that the law of limitation applicable to the case was not Act XIV of 1859, the law in force at the date of the acknowledgments, but Act XV of 1877, which was in force at the time of the institution of the suit.

Under article 148 of schedule II to that Act the period of limitation prescribed for a suit to redeem a mortgage was 60 years from the time when the right to redeem accrued, and by section 19 an acknowledgment to be effective must be "signed by the party against whom such right is claimed or by some person through whom he claims title."

Held that the respondents derived title through the last male owner, and not through his widow and daughter, who were therefore not competent under section 19 to make an acknowledgment of the right of redemption so as to bind any interests except their own. To hold otherwise would be to extend the power of a Hindu female in possession of a limited interest to bind the estate to an extent which was not sanctioned by authority.

An acknowledgment of liability only extends the period of limitation within which the suit must be brought, and does not confer title, and, with reference to section 2 of Act XV of 1877, was not a "thing done" within the meaning of section 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868).

There was nothing in article 148 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877 to justify a holding that by reason of the fusion of the interests of the mortgagor and mortgagee (which, it was alleged, took place between the years 1883 and 1898) the [228] period of limitation which began to run on the 3rd of January, 1842, was suspended; which would be deciding contrary to section 9 of the Act: this suit not being one to which the proviso to that section applied.

Barrell v. Earl of Egremont,(1) distinguished.

The present suit was not barred as res judicata by a former suit in 1901.

With regard to contentions raised on this appeal which had not been raised before at any stage of the case, and consequently had not been considered by any of the Courts below, nor were even suggested in the reasons in the case of the appellant to England, their Lordships adhered to the established practice of the Board not to allow new cases to be made for the first time on appeal to His Majesty in Council.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (7th August 1909 of the High Court at Allahabad, which reversed a judgment and decree (24th March 1908) of the court of the District Judge of Aligarh, who had affirmed a decree (16th September 1907) of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was one for redemption of a mortgage, dated the 2nd of January, 1842, and the only question for determination on this appeal is whether the suit is barred by limitation. The District Judge held that it was not barred ; but on appeal the High Court (BANERJI and TUDBALL, JJ.) reversed that decision and dismissed the suit.

The case before the High Court will be found reported in I. L. R. 32 All. 33, where the facts are sufficiently stated.

The facts of the case are also fully stated in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee.

On this appeal, which was heard ex parte —G. Cave, K. C. and J. M. Parikh for the appellant contended that the suit was not barred by limitation. The Act of Limitation applicable to the suit was Act XIV of 1859 section 1, clause 15, under which the acknowledgments of 1866 and 1867, made by Musammat Jamna, and Musammat Janki respectively were valid and binding on the respondents and therefore effective to extend the period of limitation. Those acknowledgments, having been made while Act XIV of 1859 was in operation, were, within the meaning of section 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868) " things done" before the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, came into force, and that Act being a repealing Act did not affect them. The appellant, it was therefore submitted, acquired a title under Act XIV of 1859, and Act IX of 1871, and under section 2 of Act XV [229] of 1877, nothing contained in that Act affected his title. The ladies, who claimed through the original mortgagee, were full owners of the mortgagee rights, and therefore bound the succeeding heirs in the way stated in Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Shivagunga (1). They represented the estate, and their acknowledgments were valid, so as to bind their successors in title, the respondents. Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (2), and Mayne's Hindu Law (7th ed.), page 705, paragraph 519, page 818, paragraph 605, page 840, paragraph 624, and page 852, paragraph 634, were referred to. Moreover, between the years 1883 and 1898 there was a union of the rights of the mortgagor and those of the mortgagee in the appellant and his father, the effect of which, it was submitted, was that the operation of the Limitation Act was suspended during that period, and consequently, even if Act XV of 1877 applied, the suit would not be barred by lapse of time. There must under article 148 of Act XV of 1877 be one person liable to pay interest under the mortgage and with a right to redeem and another person entitled to receive interest, and liable to a suit for redemption ; and where there is a union of those rights in one person, as there was here between 1883 and 1898, there was no operation of the Act. Reference was made to Burrell v. Earl of Egremont (3), the principle on which Lord Langdale M. R. acted in that case in construing section 40 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, C. 27, being, it was contended, applicable to the present case ; and Seagram v. Knight (4) : and sections 9 and 20 of Act XV of 1877 were also referred to. As long as the right of the mortgagee, and the right of redemption remained in one person, the equity of redemption could not be enforced. The cause of action for redemption arose again at earliest when, on the death of Musammat Janki in 1893, there was separation of those rights—under article 148 limitation begins to run when the right to recover posseasion accrues, and until 1898 there was no right to recover possession. It was also contended that in 1904 the respondent being full owner of the property sued only for the mortgagee's right, and did not assert his right to that of the mortgagor; his conduct led the appellant to believe that he (the appellant could redeem the [230] mortgage and operated as an estoppel against him.

The present suit was not barred by the suit brought by the respondent in 1904, the right to redeem was not in that suit decided against the appellant.

1913, March 6th:—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Sir JOHN EDGE:—

The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought on the 4th of March, 1907, by Lala Soni Ram the appellant here for the redemption of a mortgage which had been made on the 2nd of January, 1842, by the then owners of mauza Kheria Buzurg in favour of Khushwakt Rai, who was on the making of the mortgage put in possesion by the mortgagors. The mortgage was usufructuary, the profits, except Rs. 80 per annum, were to be taken by the mortgagee in lieu of interest and the mortgagee was to pay to the mortgagors annually the Rs. 80 as malikana.

By the mortgage it was provided that the mortgagors should be entitled to redeem and to obtain possession of the mortgaged property on payment of Rs. 4,000, which was the amount advanced to them. No date for the redemption of the mortgage was specified and consequently the mortgage became liable to be redeemed immediately after it was made. The whole 20 biswas of Kheria Buzurg were included in the mortgage, but the original mortgagors, or some of them, redeemed the mortgage so far as it affected 6 biswas 17½ biswansis of Kheria Buzurg, and this suit relates to the right to redeem the mortgage so far as it affects the remaining 13 biswas 2½ biswansis of the property which was mortgaged in 1842, if that right could at the date of the suit have been enforced by suit.

In order to understand the issues which were raised and were tried in the court of first instance, or on appeal below, it is necessary briefly to refer to the title of Lala Soni Ram, the plaintiff appellant, as representing the original mortgagors and to the title of the defendants respondents as representing the original mortgagee Khushwakt Rai, and to refer to a suit which was brought on the 18th of May, 1904, by the present defendant respondent Babu Charan Behari Lal, and his brother Lala Shib Shankar Lal against the present plaintiff appellant Lala Soni Ram. Lala Shib Shankar Lal [231] was a defendant to this suit and is represented here by the respondents to this appeal.

Between the years 1880 and 1883 Mannu Lal, since deceased, who was the father of the plaintiff appellant, acquired the rights and interests of the original mortgagors in 13 biwas, 2½ biswansis of Kheria Buzurg to which this suit relates. These rights and interests, so far as they can be enforced, are now vested in the plaintiff appellant, Lala Soni Ram.

Khushwakt Rai, the original mortgagee, died shortly before 1855, leaving surviving him his widow, Musammat Janma, who died on the 10th of May, 1866, and a daughter Musammat Janki, who died on the 30th of May 1898. Babu charan Behari Lal and Lala Shib Shankar Lal, who were the plaintiff in the suit of 1904, were the sons of Musammat Janki.

On the 31st of March, 1866, Musammat Jamna, who had succeeded to a Hindu widow's estate on the death of her husband Khushwakt Rai, executed a sale deed by which she transferred a moiety of her interest as mortgagee of Kheria Buzurg to Debi Prasad and Gulab Rai, and on the same date by deed hypothecated to them the other moiety of her interest as mortgagee. On the 29th of April, 1867, Musammat Janki executed a sale deed in favour of Debi Prasad and Gulab Rai, by which she transferred to them her interest as mortgagee in the moiety of Kheria Buzurg which had been hypothecated to them by Musammat Jamna in 1866. The mortgagee's interest in Kheria Buzurg, which by the sale deeds of 1866 and 1867, had vested for the lives of Musammat Jamna and Musammat Janki in Debi Prasad and Gulab Rai, vested by assignments in or before 1883 in Mannu Lal, and from 1883 until Mussammat Janki's death in 1898 Mannu Lal or his son, Lala Soni Ram, the plaintiff appellant, who succeeded him, enjoyed the rigts of the mortgagors and the mortgagee in the 13 biswas 2½ biswansis.

In the deed of the 31st of March, 1866, Musammat Jamna has described herself as a mortgagee and had acknowledged the existence of the mortgage of 1842, and in the deed of the 29th of April, 1867, Musammat Janki had similarly described herself as mortgagee and acknowledged the existence of the mortgage. Neither of those deeds is before this Board, but that is the [232] inference which their Lordships draw from the proceedings and the judgments in the Courts below.

After the death of Musammat Janki her sons, Babu Charan Behari Lal and Lala Shib Shankar Lal, brought a suit on the 18th of May, 1904, against Lala Soni Ram, the present plaintiff appellant to obtain possession as mortgagees of the 13 biswas 2½ biswansis of Kheria Buzurg on the ground that the transfers which were made in the life-time of Musammat Jamna and Musammat Janki became ineffectual as against them on the death of those ladies. In that suit Babu Charan Behari Lal and Lala Shib Shankar Lal on the 12th of October, 1904, obtained a decree for possession.

So far as appears from that part of the record which is before this Board, Babu Charan Behari Lal and Lala Shib Shankar Lal did not in the suit of 1904 allege or admit that the mortgagors' interest had vested in Mannu, or was vested in Lala Soni Ram, the present plaintiff appellant; their case apparently simply was that the title to the mortgagees' interest which had been transferred by Musammat Jamna and Musammat Janki had determined, so far as Lala Soni Ram was concerned, on the death of Musammat Janki and that they became entitled as representing Khushwakt Rai, the mortgagee, on her death to possession as mortgagees. Their case was, that after the death of Musammat Janki, Lala Soni Ram was a trespasser, as in fact he was, and they claimed mesne profits. It does not appear that Babu Charan Behari Lal and Lala Shib Shankar Lal alleged, or otherwise admitted, in the suit of 1904, that a right to redeem the mortgage of 1842, which could be enforced by suit vested in anyone, nor was it material to their cause of action that a right to redeem which could be enforced by suit should be vested in anyone. Their title to possession on the death of Musammat Janki, which was the title they claim, related back to and was based on the mortgage of 1842, whether the right to enforce by suit redemption of that mortgage had or had not been extinguished before the 18th of May, 1904 by limitation. The mortgage had not been redeemed and nothing had happened between the death of Musammat Janki and the 18th of May, 1904, to disentitle Babu Charan Behari Lal and Lala Shib Shankar Lal to a decree for possession based on that original title. As a matter of fact if Lala Soni Ram had desired, on the death of [233] Musammat Janki, in 1898, to redeem, he could have brought his suit within sixty years from the date of the mortgage, as the sixty years did not expire until January, 1902, but apparently he hoped, by holding on to the possession of the 13 biswas 2½ biswansis to escape from having to pay the Rs. 4,000 redemption money. When the suit of 1904 was brought, the period of 60 years, computed from the 2nd of January, 1842, had expired.

In this appeal, which is ex parte, the plaint and other pleadings in the suit of 1904 are not before their Lordships, but they draw the inference which they have expressed from the judgment of the 12th of October, 1904, and from the judgment of the Courts below in this suit. The effect of the suit of 1904 was to give by process of law to Babu Charan Behari Lal and Lala Shib Shankar Lal the possession as mortgagees to which they had become entitled on the death of their mother Musammat Janki on the 30th of May, 1898.

Lala Soni Ram, the present plaintiff appellant, on the 4th of March, 1907, brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh this suit against Lala Shib Shankar Lal and Babu Charan Behari Lal for the redemption of the mortgage of the 2nd January, 1842, so far as it affected the 13 biswas 2½ biswansis or Kheria Buzurg. Other defendants were subsequently added. In their written statement Lala Shib Shankar Lal and Babu Charan Behari Lal admitted that the mortgage of the 2nd of January, 1842, was made, and so far as is now material pleaded that the suit was not brought within 60 years of the date of the mortgage, that no admission of the right of the mortgagor was made within 60 years from the date of the mortgage, and consequently that the suit was barred by limitation. They also alleged that in the suit of 1904 Lala Soni Ram had pleaded that he had a right to redeem, but that the Court in that suit had decreed their claim for possession, and they relied upon section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They further pleaded that in the suit of 1904 it had been decided that the deeds which had been executed by Musammat Jamna and Musammat Janki were not binding upon them, the answering defendants, after the deaths of those ladies.

The Subordinate Judge held, and rightly as their Lordships consider, that the suit of 1904 did not by the operation of section [234] 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure bar the present suit. The suit of 1904 was a suit by Lala Shib Shankar Lal and Babu Charan Behari Lal for possession as mortgagees. The mortgage had not been redeemed, and the plea of Lala Soni Ram that he was entitled to redeem was irrelevant to a suit by the usufructuary mortgagee for possession. Lala Soni Ram's title as mortgagor was not in question in that suit, nor could he as a defendant to that suit have converted that suit into one in which he could have obtained a decree for redemption. The Subordinate Judge, however, applying section 15 of Act XIV of 1859 to the case, held that the acknowledgments of the existence of the mortgage by Musammat Jamna and Musammat Janki in their respective deeds brought this suit within time, and he gave the plaintiff a decree for redemption.

The District Judge of Aligarh, on appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, affirmed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, and by his decree of the 24th of March, 1908 dismissed the appeal. From the decree of the District Judge the defendants appealed to the High Court at Allahabad. The High Court, rightly holding that the law of limitation applicable to a suit or proceeding, is the law in force at the date of the institution of the suit or proceeding, unless there is a distinct provision to the contrary, held that Act XV of 1877, and not Act XIV of 1859, was the Limitation Act which was applicable to the suit. By section 19 of Act XV of 1877, it is, so far as is material for present purposes, enacted as follows:—

"If, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed or by some person through whom he claims title or liability, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed.

This is a suit to redeem and the period prescribed by article 148 of the second schedule to Act XV of 1877 within which a suit against a mortgagee to redeem or to recover possession of immoveable property mortgaged is 60 years from the time when the right to redeem or to recover possession accrues.

The learned Judges of the High Court held that there could not be any doubt that the mortgage of 1842 was in terms admitted by Musammat Jamna and Musammat Janki in their respective deeds, [235] but they also held that the defendants derived title through their grandfather Khushwakt Rai, who was mortgagee and the last full owner of the rights of the mortgagee, and did not derive title through Musammat Jamna or Musammat Janki, who, although for certain purposes they did represent the estate, were not persons who could be deemed to have admitted for the benefit of the mortgagee's estate a right of redemption in the mortgagor, and that in making such acknowledgments they had no power to bind any interest except their own. To have held otherwise would, in their Lordships' opinion, have been to extend the power of a Hindu woman in possession for her limited interest to bind the estate to an extent which has not been sanctioned by authority.

It was also contended in the High Court on behalf of the plaintiff that there had been a fusion of the interest of the mortgagee and the mortgagor in the same person between the years 1883 and 1893; and that no mortgage was in existence during that period; and that article 120 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877, and not article 148 applied; and that the suit was within time. The learned Judges of the High Court pointed out one obvious answer to that contention. It was that, if article 120 applied, the suit was not within time, as Musammat Janki had died more than six years before the suit was brought. They also pointed out that the mortgagee's interest which became vested in Mannu was only the limited interest of a Hindu lady, and consequently there had been no merger. The High Court, by its decree of the 7th of August, 1909, allowed the appeal on the ground that the suit was barred by limitation and dismissed the suit with costs in all Courts. From that decree the plaintiff Lala Soni Ram has brought this appeal.

In this appeal it has been contended that the Limitation Act applicable to this case is Act XIV of 1859, and consequently the acknowledgments of the existence of the mortgage of 1842 which were contained in the deeds which were executed by Musammat Jamna and Musammat Janki brought this suit within time. As to that contention it is sufficient for their Lordships to say that they agree with the High Court that Act XIV of 1859 does not apply to this suit and that the Limitation Act which does apply is Act XV of 1877, and further that the acknowledgments which were [236] made by Musammat Jamna and Musammat Janki were not acknowledgments within the meaning of section 19 of Act XV of 1877 made by a person or persons through whom the defendants derived title or liability. Their Lordships consequently consider that these acknowledgments were ineffectual to give a new period of limitation. The contention in this appeal which is based upon section 6 of the General Clauses Act and section 2 of Act XV of 1877 was pressed upon the High Court. Their Lordships agree with the High Court that an acknowledgment of liability only extends the period of limitation within which a suit must be brought and does not confer title, and is not a "thing done" within the meaning of section 6 of the General Clauses Act.

In this appeal it was also contended that the operation of Act XV of 1877 was suspended during the whole period 1883—1898 when Mannu or his son Lala Soni Ram, the plaintiff, were in the position of mortgagors and mortgagees, the contention being, that that period should be excluded from the computation of the 60 years provided by article 148 of the second schedule to Act XV of 1877, as between 1883 and 1898 no suit for redemption could have been brought by Mannu or after his death by the plaintiff Lala Soni Ram. Their Lordships are by no means certain that this particular contention was raised in the High Court. The contention there apparently was—not that the operation of article 148 was suspended during the period 1883—1898—but that by reason of the fusion of interests of mortgagor and mortgagee article 148 did not apply to this case and that the article which did apply was article 120. In support of the contention in this appeal this Board was urged to apply in this suit the principle which Lord Langdale, Master of the Rolls, applied when construing section 40 of 3 & 4 Will., IV, C. 27, in Burrell v. The Earl of Egremont (1). Their Lordships are unable to accede to that contention, as article 148 of Act XV of 1877 is essentially different in its language and intention from section 40 of 3 & 4 Will. IV, C. 27, and the facts upon which Lord Langdale acted were not in any way similar to the facts in this suit Under section 40 of 3 & 4 Will. IV, C. 27, no suit could be brought to recover money secured on a mortgage or otherwise charged upon land, but within twenty years next after a present right to [237] receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or a release of the same, unless in one or other of the events specified in the section. The 60 years' period of limitation allowed by article 148 of Act XV of 1877 begins to run in such a case as this "when the right to redeem or to recover possession accrues." In Burrell v. The Eral of Egremont (1) there was a charge upon an estate which no assignable person was liable to pay and in respect of which no person was capable of making an acknowledgment that it was due. In this case the right to redeem the mortgage of the 2nd of January, 1842, accrued to the mortgagors the moment the mortgage was executed and the 60 years' period of limitation must be computed as having begun on the 3rd of January, 1842. There is nothing in Act XV of 1877 which would justify this Board in holding that, once that period of limitation had begun to run in this case, it could be suspended. Their Lordships consider that if they were to hold that, by reason of the fusion of interests between 1883 and 1898, the period of limitation was suspended, they would—this not being a suit to which the proviso to section 9 of Act XV of 1887 applies—be deciding contrary to the express enactment of that section that "when once time has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it."

At the hearing of this appeal two other contentions, each of which involved the consideration of facts and of law as applied to these facts, were raised. Neither of those contentions, so far as appears from the record which is before this Board, had previously been raised by anyone at any stage of this suit either in the Court of first instance or on either of the appeals, and consequently had not been considered either by the Subordinate Judge or the District Judge or the learned Judges of the High Court. Further, neither of these contentions is even suggested by any of the grounds of appeal which were set out in Lala Soni Ram's application to the High Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, nor is either of them suggested in the reasons contained in the case for the appellant here, and it must be remembered that this appeal has been heard ex parte, neither the respondents nor any counsel on their behalf having appeared. Their [238] Lordships are not disposed to depart from the established practice of this Board not to allow on appeals to His Majesty in Council new cases to be made which were not made below.

The result is that their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed, and the decree of the High Court should be affirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

Before Mr. Justice Sir George Knox and Mr. Justice Muhammad Rafiq.

BACHCHAN LAL AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. BANARSI DAS (Defendant).*

[10th January, 1913.]

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order VIII, rule 6—Set-off—Claim barred according to lex fori, but not according to lex loci contractus.

In a suit filed against him in the United Provinces the defendant claimed to set off a debt, which, though it would have been barred by limitation in the United Provinces, was not barred according to the local law (that of the Punjab) applicable thereto. Held, that the set-off claimed was admissible.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are material to the purposes of this report, are as follows. The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 3,200 from the defendant, who was a resident of Umbala in the Punjab, the money being alleged to be due as the result of dealings in flour between the parties. Amongst other defences, the defendant claimed to set off the amount due on a certain rukka for Rs. 200. This set-off was disallowed by the court of first instance upon the ground that the claim on the rukka was barred by limitation. On appeal by the defendant, however, the lower appellate Court reversed the finding of the court below on this point, holding that the local law of the Punjab applied to the rukka in question, according to which the debt was not time-barred. The plaintiffs appealed in respect of this and other matters to the High Court.

Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the respondent.

KNOX and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—The appellants before us in this second appeal were plaintiffs in the court of first instance. [239] They sued the respondent for a sum of money together with costs. The sum of money, they claimed, was alleged to have arisen out of certain dealings in wheat between the parties. The sum which they sued for was Rs. 3,200. The lower appellate Court went into the accounts and gave the appellants a decree for Rs. 374-0-6 with proportionate costs. Against this decree the appellants have brought the present appeal. In the memorandum of appeal they have raised several pleas. One of these pleas, namely, plea No. 6, has been abandoned, and the pleas urged before us really resolve themselves into two, the first being that the lower appellate Court was wrong in debiting the appellants with the amount of a rukka dated the 7th of December, 1903, inasmuch as the claim on that rukka was barred by limitation.

The second point was that the account books produced by the respondent before the lower appellate Court had not been proved according to law. Before dealing with this we would note that the third plea in the memorandum of appeal is a plea calculated to get behind a finding of fact based upon evidence and of this we can take no account in second appeal. The second plea, which was to the effect that the lower court ought to have passed a preliminary decree under order XX, rule 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not entitled to any weight. We agree with the learned Judge of the court below that this was not a case in which a preliminary decree was required.

As regards the action of the lower court with reference to the rukka, the contention was that the court ought to have in the present case applied the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908 without any reference to the provisions of the Punjab Act No. I of 1904. Reference was made to Dicey on the Conflict of Laws, rule 118, page 711. But the learned advocate overlooked altogether in his argument the provisions contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, vide order VIII, rule 6. This order and rule apply equally as law in these provinces as in the Punjab in suits for recovery of money. The defendant can claim to set off against the plaintiff's demand any ascertained sum of money legally recoverable by him from the plaintiff. Without going any further into the contention raised by the learned advocate, the sum due on the rukka was a sum which the defendant, if [240] he had sued in the Punjab, could have recovered by law from the plaintiff.

As regards the plea relating to the account books, we notice that the appellants, when they filed their objections in the lower appellate Court, filed the roll of respondents in that court, and they never objected that the account books had not been proved. We understand that the respondent went into the witness box and as a matter of fact did prove the account books. This plea also fails. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu widow—Hindu law—Compromise followed by an award settling disputes as to the property of various members of the family—Effect of such award on reversionary interests.

Where the widow of one and the son of the other of two brothers, Hindus, separated in estate, entered into a compromise, which was found to be reasonable in its nature, concerning the partition of the property of the two brothers, and an award was made on the basis of such compromise, it was held that it was not open to the reversioner to dispute the validity of the compromise and award, especially when a considerable time had elapsed and most of the property had changed hands meanwhile. Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (1) and Madan Lal v. Chuttan Singh (2) followed.

[Ref: 67 I. C. 210=34 C. L. J. 323.]

THIS was a suit to set aside a deed of compromise and an award based thereon and to recover possession of certain immovable property.

The plaintiff came into court alleging that one Ganesh Rai, his maternal grandfather, was a separated Hindu and was the sole owner of the property in suit; that Musammat Gango, the widow of Ganesh Rai, on his death, took possession of the aforesaid property as a life tenant, but unlawfully transferred it, under an arbitration award, to one Bhagirath, who was Ganesh Rai's cousin, that Bhagirath sold a portion of it to Musammat Wali-un-nissa, and that the ancestor of the defendants brought a suit against the latter for pre-emption and obtained possession of the property from her. The plaintiff prayed that the arbitration award might be set aside and [241] possession delivered to him. The defendants pleaded that Ganesh Rai and Bhagirath were members of a joint Hindu family and were joint-owners of the property, and on Ganesh Rai's death, a dispute arising between Bhagirath and Musammat Gango, an arbitration award based upon a compromise between the parties was made, under which the property in suit was given to Bhagirath. He did not get it by transfer from Musammat Gango, and the plaintiff had no right to the property.

The court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim, but the lower appellate Court allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Benode Behari (with him Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji) for the appellant :—

The compromise seems to be collusive and cannot bind the reversioners. Further it was not arrived at in a contested suit and so it is of no effect. It was not even a compromise, since the arbitrators, without using their own judgment, gave the award according to the arrangement already arrived at by the parties. It would be extremely dangerous if widows were allowed to alienate property to which the reversioners would be entitled.

Mr. Agha Haidar, for the respondent :—

There is no allegation in the plaint that the compromise was collusive or fraudulent. Fraud is never presumed. If once it is found that the compromise was in every respect a fair and reasonable one the argument that it was not arrived at in a contested suit loses much of its force. The finding of the lower court is that the compromise is perfectly reasonable and saved the parties from a doubtful and ruinous litigation. On this finding the plaintiff has no case. Again the compromise is 21 years old. The property has, during the period, changed hands twice. It would be unfair if the plaintiff was allowed to take the property back from a bona fide purchaser. The plaintiff's family alone can know about the disputes which resulted in the compromise. They would not help the defendant with evidence, but would rather try to deprive him of the property. He relied on Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (1) and Madan Lal v. Chuttan Singh (2).

Munshi Benode Behari replied.

[242] GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ. :—Balkishan and Mul Chand were brothers, separate in estate. Mul Chand died leaving a son Bhagirath. In execution of a decree obtained by Bhagirath a share in a village called Jaswan was put up for sale and purchased by, or at all events in the name of, Balkishan. The last named was succeeded by his son; Ganesh, who died in 1888, leaving a widow Musammat Gango. Bhagirath put forward a claim to the share in Jaswan. The dispute was referred to the arbitration of three persons, but before an award could be made the parties agreed that the share in Jaswan should go to Bhagirath and that a share in a village called Karauri, standing in the names of Ganesh and Bhagirath, should go to Musammat Gango, and at the same time other properties were allotted to one party or the other. An award was made in terms of this agreement. In 1904, Gango gave the share in Karauri to her daughter's son, the present plaintiff. She died in 1908. In 1892 Bhagirath sold the share in Jaswan to a Musammat Wali-un-nissa, from whom it was taken under a pre-emption decree by the predecessors of the defendants. Thus, there has been several dealings with the properties included in the award. In the present suit, instituted in 1910, the plaintiff seeks to recover the share in Jaswan on the ground that he is not bound by the compromise and award made thereon. The Subordinate Judge decreed the claim, but his decision was reversed by the District Judge, who upheld the compromise, on the ground that it was a reasonable settlement of the dispute between Mussammat Gango and Bhagirath. The learned Judge was disposed to think that Balkishan and Bhagirath must have been joint owners of the share in Jaswan, as both were recorded as holders of sir and khudkasht, and Bhagirath's name remained in the khasra after the death of Balkishan. In second appeal it is contended that Musammat Gango being the holder of a limited interest in the property had no power to surrender it to Bhagirath in such a way as to bind the reversionary heirs of her husband. In our opinion there is no force in this contention. The case appears to be covered by the decision of the Privy Council in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (1) and the decision of this Court in Madan Lal v. Chuttan Singh (2). The compromise which has been found to be a reasonable [243] settlement was designed to put an end to a family dispute which would otherwise have resulted in ruinous litigation. On the authorities it is impossible to treat the compromise as an alienation, valid only if it can be shown to be justified by necessity. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

MOHAN LAL (Judgement-debtor) v. JAGAN NATH AND ANOTHER *Decree-holders.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 47—Execution of the decree—Partition—Objection that decree-holders had realized certain debts assigned by the decree to the judgment-debtor—Procedure.

The decree in a partition suit, inter alia, allotted a sum of money to be paid by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holders and assigned certain debts on account books to the judgment-debtor. On application by the decree-holders for execution as to the sum allotted to them, the judgment-debtor took objection that the decree holders had as a matter of fact realized a large amount of the debts which had been assigned by the decree to him. Held that the question thus raised was not a matter falling within the purview of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the judgment-debtor's remedy was by a separate suit to recover from the decree-holders the amount alleged to have been illegally realized.

[Ref. 63 I. C. 975.]

THIS appeal arose out of proceedings in execution of a decree based upon a compromise in a suit for the partition of the property of the family to which both parties belonged. Amongst this property were certain debts due on bonds and other debts due on account-books. Several of the bond debts were assigned to the plaintiffs, and the rest as well as the debts on account-books to the defendant. In addition to this the sum of Rs. 3,400 was to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs, Rs. 400 at once and the balance within two years. The sum of Rs. 400 was paid. In 1910 and 1911 there were applications made by the decree-holders in execution of the decree whereby they sought to recover the balance of Rs. 3,000. The present application for execution was made in January, 1912. On the 8th of March, 1912, the judgment-debtor filed certain objections. The objections were that the application was in contravention of the terms of the decree, that the application was time-barred, that interest had been charged by the [244] decree-holders to which they were not entitled, and that since the date of the partition decree the plaintiffs decree-holders had realized a large sum of money out of those debts which had been allotted to the judgment-debtor under the partition decree. On the 16th of March the objections were slightly amplified by another application in which the judgment-debtor sought for time to bring into court evidence to prove that the decree-holders had realized a large sum out of those debts based on account-books which had been allotted to the defendant.

The court of first instance disallowed the objections. The defendant judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

ended in a decree, dated the 3rd of March, 1908, based on a compromise. The compromise is dated the 14th of January, 1908, and was filed in the course of the appeal in this Court, on the 22nd of January, 1908, and was remitted to the court below for verification and report. It reached the court below on the 31st of January, 1908. According to the compromise the landed property was divided in a certain manner, likewise the house property. With these we are not concerned in this appeal. The third class of property consisted of debts on bonds and on accounts entered in certain account-books. Of this class about ten debts secured by bonds were allotted to the plaintiffs. The remaining debts, including all those due on accounts, were allotted to the defendant. In addition to this allotment of the property under the compromise a sum of Rs. 3,400 was to be paid by the defendant. Of this, Rs. 400 was to be paid at once and the balance of Rs. 3,000 at the end of two years. The compromise on being duly verified was submitted to this Court, and a decree was passed thereunder on the 3rd of March, 1908. The sum of Rs. 400 was paid. In 1910 and 1911 there were applications made by the decree-holders in execution of the decree, whereby they sought to recover [246] the balance of Rs. 3,000. The present application for execution was made in January, 1912. On the 8th of March, 1912, the judgment-debtor filed certain objections. The objections were that the application was in contravention of the terms of the decree; that application was time barred; that interest had been charged by the decree-holders to which they were not entitled, and that since the date of the partition decree the plaintiffs decree-holders had realized a large sum of money out of those debts which had been allotted to the judgment-debtor under the partition decree. On the 16th of March the objections were slightly amplified by another application, in which the judgment-debtor sought for time to bring into court evidence to prove that the decree-holders had realized a large sum out of those debts based on acount-books which had been allotted to the defendant. The lower court has disallowed the objection. The plea of limitation was not pressed, and the lower court held that if the decree-holders had wrongfully recovered the debts, the judgment-debtor had his remedy against the decree-holders in a regular suit. The judgment-debtor comes here on appeal, and the first plea taken is that the point raised as to the collection of debts due to the judgment-debtor by the decree-holders is a point which falls under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the lower court ought to have gone into it. To this we cannot agree. The appellant has an entirely a separate cause of action against the decree-holders, if the latter have as a matter of fact recovered the debts due to him and not to themselves. Once the final decree in the partition suit was passed, the plaintiffs, decree-holders, ceased to have any title whatever to the debts in question. It is not pleaded that the plaintiffs' decree for Rs. 3,000 has been satisfied. There has been no voluntary payment. It is further urged on behalf of the appellant that under clause (2) of section 47 we should treat his present petition of objection more in the nature of a plaint, so that the whole proceedings may be treated as a suit by him to recover the amount which he claims to have been collected by the decree-holders. We see no reason to do so, assuming for a moment that the second clause of the section enables us to do as he wishes. The present proceeding is one which has arisen out of an application by the decree-holders and the objections are merely objections asking the court to reject the application. No amount [246] is specifically claimed therein as having been collected by the decree-holders.

The second ground of appeal is not pressed. The third ground of appeal has no force. Assuming that the respondents have misappropriated the money due to the appellant, the latter has a remedy by regular suit.

The fourth ground of appeal is that as the plaintiffs have refused to fulfil their obligations under the decree they are not entitled to recover the money from the appellant. In so far as the decree itself is actually concerned there is no obligation on the decree-holders which they have to perform. It is urged that on the 31st of January, 1908, when the compromise filed in this Court was received in the court below an agreement was filed by the parties on the same day under which the plaintiffs, decree-holders, agreed to make over the account-books to the defendant. It is further urged that it was clearly understood by the parties that the defendant was to have two years' time given to him under the decree (as was actually granted thereby) for payment of Rs. 3,000, because he was to have the account-books at once handed over to him to enable him to recover the debts allotted to him. It is pleaded that the decree-holders have never handed over the accounts to him, and have thereby prevented him from recovering the debts, and as a consequence have prevented him also from paying the sum of Rs 3,000. It was urged that when the previous applications were made by the decree-holders this objection was all along taken, though it is also admitted that as a matter of fact it was not taken in the present instance in the court below. It seems to us quite clear that the rights of the parties, after the compromise had been arrived at were governed by the decree of the 3rd of March, 1908. It may be that on a true interpretation of that decree the judgment-debtor was entitled to the possession of the account-books, as the debts based on those account-books were entered therein and they formed the chief proof of those debts. It was open to the judgment-debtor to put the decree into execution and to recover the books, from the plaintiffs if they did not deliver them. As a matter of fact the decree is silent as to the possession of the account-books, and we do not think that we can go behind the decree to find out what other rights the parties may have. If any [247] portion of the compromise was accidentally omitted from the decree, it was open to the judgment-debtor to have the decree amended. If he intentionally omitted any portion of the compromise from the decree he has himself to blame. In any case he is not entitled to go behind the decree which finally decided the rights of the parties. This is a point which, as we have already pointed out, was not taken in the court below. If the appellant deems himself aggrieved in any way, we must leave him to his remedy by a separate suit. We think the decision of the court below is perfectly correct. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mortgage—Parties—Suit for entire mortgage money and sale of entire mortgaged property—Omission to implead certain persons interested—Decree to which plaintiffs entitled.

Where a plaintiff mortgagee sued for the recovery of the whole of the mortgage money by the sale of the whole of the mortgaged property, but by an oversight omitted to implead certain persons who had acquired a share in the property subsequent to the mortgage in suit, it was held, that so much of the claim should be decreed as was proportionate to the interests of the persons who were before the court.

[Ref. 70 I. C. 542=35 C. L. J. 332; 72 I. C. 458; 75 I. C. 917.]

THIS was a suit on a mortgage made in favour of the first plaintiff in January, 1891. Some of the defendants were the mortgagors and remainder were impleaded on the ground that they had acquired an interest in the mortgaged property by purchase. One of the defences to the suit was that the plaintiffs had failed to implead four persons who had acquired one-sixth of the mortgaged property after the mortgage. The first court gave the plaintiffs a decree for 5/6ths of the amount due on the mortgage, to be recovered, if necessary, by sale of 5/6ths of the property mortgaged. The defendant appealed. The District Judge held that the non-joinder of owners of one-sixth of the property was fatal to the suit, which he accordingly dismissed.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

the present case the plaintiffs sued for recovery of the whole of mortgage money by sale of the whole of the mortgaged property. But by an oversight they omitted to implead certain persons who owned a share in the property distinct from the shares held by the other defendants. It seems to us that if the other questions in the case are decided in favour of the plaintiffs, so much of the claim should be decreed as is proportionate to the interest of the persons who are before the court. There seems to be some question as to whether the defendants are the owners of 5/6ths or a smaller share. This matter may be determined by the lower appellate court. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court, and remand the case to that court to be restored to the [249] pending file and disposed of according to law. Musammat Jai Dei has come here on appeal, and it is urged that the condition imposed by the court is ultra vires and that so much of the order passed is illegal. The case is similar in all respects to the case of Musammat Shib Dei v. Ajudhia Prasad (1), decided on the 13th of February, 1911. As in that cause, all that the Court could do was to require as a condition precedent to grant of the certificate that the widow should give security under section 9 for rendering an account of the debts and securities received by her and for indemnifying the persons who may be entitled to the whole or any part of the debt. The certificate as granted by the Judge would only entitle the widow to recover from the debtors the interest on the debts. It is not a question of the—"securities and interest on securities"—as defined in section 3 of the Act. We set aside the order of the Court below and direct that Court to readmit the application and to proceed to enter into and decide as to whether or not there is any necessity to take security from the widow under the circumstances. The parties will be allowed to go into evidence on the point and on that evidence the Court will come to a conclusion. If it comes to the conclusion that security is necessary, it will grant a certificate conditional on her furnishing security. If it comes to the conclusion that security is not necessary, it will grant a certificate unconditionally. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

RICHARDS, C.J., and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale upon a mortgage, and the only question we have to determine is whether the court below was right in dismissing the claim in so far as it sought to bring to sale the village Rasulpur, tappa Kadar. The court below has held that having regard to the provisions of section 21 of the Registration Act of 1877 the registration of the mortgage deed as regards that village was void and it has accordingly dismissed the claim in respect of that village. The correctness of this decision is challenged in this appeal by the plaintiffs.

The mortgage comprises a number of villages, among which is the village Rasulpur, and it is thus described in the deed. "The entire mauza Rasulpur, tappa Padya, . . . pargana and district Basti . . . which are mortgaged with possession to other persons". Mauza Rasulpur is not in tappa Padya, but is in fact in tappa Kadar. This is established by the evidence to which the court below has referred, but it is admitted that it is situate in pargana Basti and in the Basti district, and it was also mortgaged with possession to other persons. The court below holds that as the tappa in which the property in question is situate has been wrongly given in the mortagage deed, the registration of that document is thereby vitiated. Section 21 of the Registration Act merely provides that a non-testamentary document relating to immovable property should contain a [252] description of such property sufficient to identify the same, and the appendix to the Registration Manual required that the name of the village, pargana and district should be entered. In the present instance the name of the village and the names of the pargana and the district in which it is situate are given in the mortgage deed. The only defect is the mistake in the name of the tappa. The fact that it is further mentioned in the mortagage deed that the mortgaged property is subject to a prior mortgage under which the mortgagee is in possession is another circumstance which would enable one to identify the property intended to be mortgaged and mentioned in the mortgage deed. We are unable to hold that the mistake in the tappa is alone sufficient to vitiate the registration of the document which was accepted for registration and actually registered. The description given, in spite of the error in the tappa, was in our opinion sufficient to identify the property and that part of the description which was in fact erroneous may well be disregarded.

A similar question arose in Beni Madho Singh v. Jagal Singh (1) and it was held that a sale deed having been registered, the registration could not be a nullity merely by reason of there being an error in the description of the property. The court below was, therefore, in our opinion wrong in dismissing the claim as regards the village Rasulpur.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent, Kashi Prasad, that he was a bona fide purchaser without notice of the plaintiff's earlier mortgage. In the first place we may point out that the property was sold and was purchased by Kashi Prasad in execution of his own decree. In the next place there is nothing to show that he made any inquiry as to the existence of a prior mortgage on the property. If he had made any inquiry, it is clear that he would have found that the property which is mentioned in the mortgage deed in suit as being in the possession of a prior mortgagee is the property now sought to be sold. He never came forward to say that he was misled in any way by the misdescription in the mortgage deed. The plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to a decree for sale of Rasulpur as against the respondent Kashi Prasad.

[253] It was contended on behalf of the respondent Hira Prasad that the decree for sale of Rasulpur in favour of the plaintiff should be subject to two prior mortgages, namely, one of July, 1880, and the other of the 25th of November, 1880. The mortgage of the 2nd of July, 1880, is a usufructuary mortgage made in favour of Ram Narain and others, and the other mortgage is a simple mortgage in favour of Sham Narain and others, the predecessors in title of Hira Prasad. Hira Prasad has purchased the mortgagee rights in regard to half of the property and has redeemed the mortgage in respect of the other half and has thus stepped into the shoes of the prior mortgagee. He is, therefore, entitled to claim that the decree in the plaintiff's favour should be subject to the mortgage of the 2nd of July, 1880. This is conceded by the learned advocate for the plaintiff, and indeed in the plaint the plaintiff's prayer was that the sale should be subject to that mortgage. As for the mortgage of the 25th of November, 1880, the court below has held that, as a decree was obtained on the basis of that mortgage, the said mortgage has merged in the decree and that the decree has become time-barred and is no longer capable of execution. So that Hira Prasad cannot now claim that the sale in enforcement of the plaintiff's mortgage should be subject to the mortgage of the 25th of November, 1880. In the connected execution First Appeal, No. 303 of 1912, decided by us to-day, we have held that the decree obtained on foot of the mortgage of the 25th of November, 1880, is no longer capable of execution and is time-barred and it is clear that it was also time-barred on the date on which the plaintiffs brought their suit. That being so, that mortgage no longer subsists and cannot be enforced.

The result is that we allow the appeal so far that we vary the decree of the court below by adding to the decree a direction for sale of the village Rasulpur, tappa Kadar, subject to the mortgage of the 2nd of July, 1880. The appellants will have their costs in both courts as part of the decretal amount which may be recovered by sale of the village Rasulpur and the other villages ordered to be sold by the decree of the Court below. In other respects we affirm the decree of the court below. We extend the time for payment for six months from this date.

Decree modified.

Held that the scribe of a mortgage deed cannot be counted as an attesting witness merely because he has signed the deed, even though the deed may in fact have been executed in his presence. To be an "attesting witness" within the meaning of section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, the witness must have seen the document executed and have signed it as a witness.

Ranu v. Laxmanrao (1); Burdett v. Spilsbury (2) and Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Ravuthan (3) followed. Radha Kishen v. Fateh Ali Khan (4), Raj Narain Ghosh v. Abdur Rahim (5) and Muhammad Ali v. Jafar Khan (6), discussed.

[Ref. 62 I. C. 97=48 Cal. 61 ; 65 I. C. 64.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—The plaintiffs sued upon a mortgage bond. They produced none of the attesting witnesses to prove the bond, although one of them was alive and procurable. They produced the scribe, Ghulam Jilani, who stated that at the request of the executant who was illiterate, he had signed the executant's name for him and that the executant had touched the pen. He also stated that the consideration was paid in his presence. Ghulam Jilani had signed the bond as a scribe and not expressly as an attesting witness. The Munsif held the bond proved. On appeal the District Judge held that the bond was not duly proved and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the appellants: —

A scribe who has signed his name on the deed and who is in a position to give evidence as to the execution thereof may be considered to be an attesting witness although he has not signed specifically as such. The evidence of such a scribe is legally sufficient to prove the bond ; Muhammad Ali v. Jafar Khan (6), Radha Kishen v. Fateh Ali Khan (4). To be an attesting witness a person need not describe himself as such on the deed, [255] nor is it necessary that his name should appear on a particular part of the document, e.g., the margin, rather than on any other part of it. He is an attesting witness if the execution of the document has happened in his presence, and he is able to testify to it. I am further supported by the cases of Raj Narain Ghosh v. Abdur Rahim (5) and Dinamayee Debi v. Bon Behari Kapur (7). At all events the District Judge should have granted our prayer for an opportunity to produce the attesting witness who is alive.

Munshi Govind Prasad, for the respondents :—

In order to be an attesting witness within the meaning of section 68 of the Evidence Act it is necessary that the witness should have seen the deed executed and have signed the deed as a witness of that fact. A scribe who signs the deed merely as the writer thereof, and not as purporting to be a witness of the execution he is not an attesting witness. I rely on the cases of Ranu v. Laxmanrao (1) and Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Ravuthan (3). The appellants who deliberately failed to call the attesting witness have no right to be given an opportunity to call him now.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq replied.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ.:—This was a suit upon a mortgage for Rs. 99 made in December, 1884. The claim was decreed by the first court, but was dismissed by the District Judge on appeal on the ground that the mortgage deed had not been proved as required by section 68 of the Evidence Act.

The only witness called to prove the execution of the deed was Ghulam Jilani, the man who wrote out the deed. He deposed that the deed was executed in his presence. The question is whether he was an attesting witness within the meaning of section 68 of the Evidence Act. He signed his name on the deed in the usual way, but he did so for the purpose of showing that it had been written out by him, not for the purpose of showing that he was an attesting witness. In fact there can be no doubt that he wrote his name on the deed before the deed was signed by the executant. The appellants rely upon the decision of BURKITT J. [256] in Radha Kishen v. Fateh Ali Khan (1) in which it seems to have been held that section 68 had been complied with where the plaintiff had called "scribe of the deed, who, though not an attesting witness, had affixed his name to the deed and who swore that the deed had been executed in his presence". That decision was cited with approval by HARINGTON J. in Raj Narain Ghosh v. Abdur Rahim (2). BURKITT J., professed to follow the decision of BANERJI and AIKMAN, JJ., in Muhammad Ali v. Jafar Khan (3). We do not think that those learned Judges intended to hold in that case that a man should be regarded as an attesting witness merely because he had written out the deed and signed his name on it and sworn that the deed was executed in his presence. We think that they intended to hold only that if the writer of a deed signed it with a view to testifying to the fact of the execution he would be an attesting witness although he was not so described on the face of the deed. Unless the report of the case of Radha Kishen v. Fateh Ali Khan is misleading, we think that BURKITT J., must have misinterpreted the decision of BANERJI and AIKMAN, JJ.

In Ranu v. Laxmanrao (4) it was held, following Burdett v. Spilsbury (5), that an attesting witness was a witness who had seen the deed executed and who had signed it as a witness. In the recent case of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Ravuthan (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted the decision in Burdett v. Spilsbury with approval, and in particular approved of the statement of the Lord Chancellor that "the party who sees the will executed is in fact a witness to it and if he subscribes as a witness he is then an attesting witness". They held that the word "attested" in section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act was used in that sense. It is evident that the word 'attesting' in section 68 of the Evidence Act is used in the same sense. Ghulam Jilani may have witnessed the execution of the deed now in suit, but he did not sign the deed as a witness. We must therefore hold that he is not an attesting witness and the production of his evidence was not a compliance with section 60 of the Evidence Act. We think, however, that the case should go back to the lower [257] appellate court in order that the plaintiffs may have an opportunity of producing further evidence. Ghulam Jilani stated that one of the attesting witnesses was still alive. The decision of BURKITT J. justified the plaintiffs in supposing that they had complied with law. There is before us an affidavit that the plaintiffs asked the District Judge to give them an opportunity of producing other evidence. We allow the appeal, set aside the decision of the lower appellate court and remand the case to that court in order that it may be disposed of according to law with reference to the above remarks. Costs in this Court to be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed and cause remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 287 (c)—Execution of decree—Mortgage on property sold notified at time of sale—Subsequent suit on mortgage—Auction-purchaser not estopped from questioning validity of mortgage.

In proceedings in execution of a decree a person alleging himself to be the mortgagee of property about to be sold asked the executing court to notify the existence of his prior incumbrance on the property to be sold, and the Court, without apparently making any inquiry as to the genuineness of the mortgage, did so, but did not sell the property subject to the prior incumbrance. The property was sold and purchased by the decree-holder.

Held on suit by the mortgagee that the decree-holder auction purchaser was not estopped from contesting the validity of the mortgage so notified. Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (1) followed.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

Muhammad Mushtaq executed a mortgage on the 14th of January, 1895, in favour of Radha Kishan. The mortgage was unregistered. In execution of a decree against Muhammad Mushtaq, Jairaj Mal attached and put up to sale the property of Muhammad Mushtaq which had been mortgaged. Thereupon Radha Kishan applied, on the 19th of September, 1904, to the execution court that the amount due to him under the mortgage might be notified along with the decretal amount : and on the same day the court passed the order :—" Let the amount be notified." This was done. [258] The property was put up to auction and purchased by Jairaj Mal. Subsequently, Radha Kishan sued on his mortgage, when Jairaj Mal raised the defence that the mortgage was fictitious and without consideration. The court of first instance gave effect to this plea, and dismissed the suit. The court of first appeal reversed this decision, being of opinion that Jairaj Mal was estopped from raising this plea, for the reason that he had not raised any objection when the mortgage was ordered to be notified. This view was upheld by the court of second appeal. Thereupon Jairaj Mal petitioned for a reference, and the case was referred to the High Court for opinion under rule 17 of the Kumaun Rules.

Mr. Agha Haidar, for the petitioner (defendant), contended that the application made by Radha Kishan was not a claim or objection coming under section 278 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. He merely asked that the amount of his lien might be notified in the sale proclamation. The court held no investigation into the matter and the property was not put up for sale subject to mortgage. If the court had intended to do that it would have said so. The order was not passed under section 282 of the Code. The mortgage was simply notified under section 287 (c). Under such circumstances the auction-purchaser was not debarred from raising the plea that the mortgage was fictitious and without consideration. He relied on the case of Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (1).

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (with him Mr. J. M. Banerji), for the opposite party (plaintiff), contended that the ruling cited by the applicant could not apply to the facts of the present case. Here the decree-holder himself, who eventually became the auction-purchaser, had acquiesced in the proclamation of the lien. If the mortgage was fictitious he should have opposed the application to have the lien notified. But he agreed to the notification being made, and thus joined in the representation that only the equity of redemption was being sold, with the result that he was able to purchase the property for a small price. His conduct estopped him. Besides, there was nothing to show that the court did not inquire into the validity of the mortgage, and every presumption should be made in favour of the regularity of the court's proceedings.

[259] GRIFFIN and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—This is a reference made to this Court under the Kumaun Rules. Jairaj Mal, in execution of a decree against one Muhammad Mushtaq, applied for sale of certain property. In the course of the execution proceedings one Radha Kishan, on the 19th of September, 1904, put in an application to the effect that a mortgage of the 14th of January, 1895, be notified at the time of the sale of the property. On the same date the court executing the decree passed the order :—" Let the mortgage be notified." We have no information as to whether any inquiry took place in that court as to the genuineness of the mortgage set up by Radha Kishan. The property was sold and was purchased by Jairaj Mal. In the year 1910, Radha Kishan sued to recover principal and interest on this document of the 14th of January, 1895. The defendant No. 2, Jairaj Mal, pleaded that the mortgage sued on was altogether a fictitious document. His defence was upheld by the court of first instance, which dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff appealed. The court of first appeal held that, as the mortgage deed of 1895 was proclaimed as a lien on the property, Jairaj Mal cannot now claim that " this mortgage is to be as if it had never been. As he has taken no steps to set it aside, it seems to me that he is bound by it and must either satisfy the mortgage or suffer the land to be sold." That court allowed the plaintiff's appeal. On a further appeal by the defendant that court upheld the decision of the first appellate court. The Commissioner held that " it has been rightly held that he (defendant) is now estopped from putting forward an allegation that this mortgage-deed is not a genuine document." Jairaj Mal then petitioned the Local Government, with the result that we have before us this reference. The question as to which our opinion is invited is whether the Commissioner was wrong in law in holding that the appellant was estopped in questioning the mortgage deed. In our opinion, on the facts stated, the appellant is not estopped from questioning the mortgage deed in suit. The mortgage deed was notified in the proceedings of 1904 on the application of Radha Kishan. There was no declaration, act or omission on the part of Jairaj Mal which would operate as an estoppel. The ruling of this Court in Shib Kunwar Singh v. Shro Prasad Singh (1) [260] lays down that a person in the position of Jairaj Mal is not debarred from proving that the mortgage set up by the plaintiff was fictitious and without consideration. This being our opinion on the question of law involved, we think that the proper course to be adopted is to send the case back to the first appellate

Act No. I of 1872 (Indian Evidence Act), section 91—Evidence, admissibility of—Confession made to inquiring magistrate, but not recorded by him in writing—Criminal Procedure Code, sections 364 and 533.

Held that a confession of an accused person made to a magistrate holding an inquiry is a matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document within the meaning of section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and that no evidence can be given of the terms of such a confession except the record, if any, made under section 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code has no application to a case where no record whatever has been made of such a confession.

[Ref. 69 I. C. 264=14 L. W. 542=1921 M. W. N. 779=42 M. L. J. 37=45 Mad. 230.]

THIS was an appeal on behalf of the Local Government against an order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge of Saharanpur. The accused in this case made a confession before a Tahsildar who was holding an inquiry as a Magistrate. The Tahsildar did not record the confession in writing. At the trial the Tahsildar offered oral evidence of what the accused had stated to him in the confession. The Sessions Judge held that this evidence was inadmissible, and, there being no other evidence upon which much reliance could be placed, acquitted the accused.

The Government Advocate (Mr. A. E. Ryves), for the Crown, contended that oral evidence of the confession was admissible. A confession made to a private individual might be proved by the oral evidence of that individual, and there was no provision of law which prohibited such a course when the individual to whom the confession was made was a magistrate holding an inquiry.

[261] Mr. Nihal Chand, for the accused, contended that it would be dangerous to allow such oral evidence to be given. Section 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code was enacted to guard against this danger. That section read with section 91 of the Evidence Act rendered such oral evidence inadmissible.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ. :—This is an appeal under section 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against an order of the Sessions Judge of Saharanpur acquitting one Gulabu of a charge of having murdered his wife Musammat Khushalia. It appears the Tahsildar of Chakrata, who has the powers of a magistrate of the third class, and who has been invested by the Local Government with power to take cognizance of offences upon complaint or upon police reports, received information in the shape of a complaint that the woman had been murdered by her husband. He sent for a number of persons and had their statements recorded in his presence by a wasil-baqi navis. He also interrogated Gulabu. The case was subsequently taken up by the Cantonment Magistrate and Gulabu was committed for trial. At the trial the Tahsildar was asked by the public prosecutor to repeat a confession said to have been made to him by Gulabu. The Sessions Judge declined to allow this to be done. On behalf of the the Crown it is contended that the Sessions Judge ought to have allowed the Tahsildar to repeat the confession. The Tahsildar's evidence shows that he was conducting an inquiry into this affair at the time when the statement was made to him. In the court below it was contended on behalf of the accused that the Tahsildar had the powers of a police officer and was acting as such, but there is nothing to show that he had been invested with the powers of a police officer. The prosecution say, and we think rightly, that he must be deemed to have been conducting an inquiry as a magistrate. Section 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that whenever an accused person is examined by a magistrate the whole of the examination, including the questions put to him and every answer given by him, shall be recorded in full. But no record whatever was made of Gulabu's statement. Section 533 of the Code provides that if any court before which a confession, recorded or purporting to be recorded under section 364, is tendered, finds that any of the provisions of that section have not been complied with by the [262] magistrate recording the confession, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded, and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, section 91, such statement shall be admitted if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits. This reference to section 91 of the Evidence Act shows that the Legislature intended that the provisions of that section should apply to the case of a confession made by an accused person to a magistrate holding an inquiry. Reading section 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with section 91 of the Evidence Act we must hold that a confession of an accused person made to a magistrate holding an inquiry is a matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document within the meaning of the latter section, and that no evidence can be given of the terms of such a confession except the record, if any, made under section 364. Section 533 has no application to a case where no record whatever has been made of such a confession. The learned Government Advocate is unable to refer to any case in which oral evidence of the terms of a confession made to a magistrate during the course of an inquiry has been admitted, and we know of no case in which this has been done. Apart from this objection to the reception of oral evidence of the confession, we would point out, as the learned Seasions Judge has done, that the confession was made under peculiar circumstances. It is more than doubtful whether it was made voluntarily. The evidence of the Tahsildar shows that it was made after the Tahsildar had arrested the accused and told him that evidence had been obtained which showed that he had committed murder. The Tahsildar admits that he took no steps to ascertain whether the confession was made voluntarily or under pressure. Lastly, assuming that the confession can be admitted in evidence, we do not think that the case calls for further inquiry. The only evidence in support of the alleged confession is the statement of a man named Jaswant. At the trial this man gave evidence to the effect that the woman had died as the result of a miscarriage. A previous statement made by the witness to the Tahsildar on the 24th of April, 1912, was put to him and he denied that he had made it, but he said that through fear he had told the Tahsildar that Gulabu had brought out the body and that blood was then oozing from the mouth and the nostrils. [263] The statement made by the witness on the 24th of April, 1912, in the absence of the accused, is not admissible in evidence under section 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The witness was examined again by the CantonmentM agistrate on the 4th of June and he then admitted that he had made the statement of the 24th of April and also admitted that it was true. It is possible that the statement of the 24th of April might be treated as having been incorporated in and so forming part of the statement of the 4th of June which was made in the presence of the accused. If so, it might be admitted under section 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. But on the 4th of June, while admitting the truth of his previous statement of April 24th, Jaswant made other statements wholly inconsistent with that statement. It is impossible to place much reliance on such a witness. It seems to us that, even if the confession were admitted in evidence, it would be unsafe to rely on it and that the other evidence is wholly insufficient to justify a conviction. We therefore dismiss this appeal and direct that Gulabu be set at liberty.

Hindu law—adoption—Ahirs—Validity of adoption after marriage of adopted son.

Held that amongst Ahirs the adoption of a son after his marriage has taken place is not permissible. Pichuvayyan v. Subbayyan (1) followed.

[Ref. 68 I. C. 763.]

THE plaintiff in this case sued on the allegation that over six years ago the defendant, who was his paternal uncle, had adopted him with all due ceremony. He claimed a declaration of title and possession of his share of the family property by partition. The defendant admitted the factum of the adoption, but pleaded that it was invalid in law for the reason that at the time of the adoption the plaintiff was a married man with a daughter of his own. The parties were ahirs by caste. Both the lower courts gave effect to [264] the defendant's plea and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the appellant:—

Ahirs do not belong to the twice-born classes. They have no upanayan. They are the descendants of mixed marriages and are sudras. Among the ahirs of the United Provinces a nephew can be adopted at any age; in the case of an outsider the age must not be more than 12 years; Crooke, Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces, Vol. I, p. 50 et seq; and p. 59. Whether, apart from this special custom, a married man can be adopted by Sudras generally is a question on which the only authority of this High Court is an obiter dictum in the case of Ganga Sahai

v. Lekhraj Singh (1). There are rulings of the Bombay High Court in my favour. Secondly, the defendant having adopted the plaintiff cannot now, after the lapse of over six years, call it in question on any ground. He is estopped ; Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (2). Thirdly, the defendant is barred by the limitation of six years from impugning the validity of the adoption. The plea taken by him aims, though indirectly, at getting the adoption set aside. He cannot indirectly effect that which he is barred by limitation from doing directly ; Mohesh Narain Munshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra (3).

Babu Durga Charan Banerji, for the respondent :—

A married person cannot be adopted by a Sudra. According to the Dattaka Chandrika upanayan is the limit of age for adoption among the twice-born classes and marriage is the limit for Sudras ; Bhattacharyya : Hindu Law (3rd Edition), Vol. I, p. 446 ; Mayne : Hindu Law (7th Edition), p. 181 ; Vythilinga Muppanar v. Vijayathammal (4). Secondly, the defendant is not estopped from denying the validity of the adoption ; Pichuvayyan v. Subbayyan (5). The case in I. L. R. 34 All. cited by the appellant, can be distinguished. It was there held that the adoptive mother was by her conduct estopped from denying the fact that she had authority from her husband to make the adoption. Here the defendant does not attempt to deny any previous statement of fact ; the adoption is by law altogether void.

[265] Mr. Nihal Chand, replied.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ.:—The plaintiff claiming to be the adopted son of defendant sued for partition. His suit was dismissed by both the courts below on the finding that the alleged adoption was invalid. The plaintiff comes here in second appeal. The parties are ahirs. The plaintiff at the time of the alleged adoption was a married man. It is admitted that among the twice-born classes a married man cannot be adopted. The court below says that ahirs belong to the twice-born classes. This assertion is challenged in appeal. However that may be, there is authority for holding that the adoption of a married man is not valid even amongst Sudras. In the case of Pichuvayyan v. Subbayyan (5) it was said that an adoption in order to be valid even among Sudras must take place before the marriage of the adopted son. Reference is made to the Dattaka Chandrika. The same rule is to be found in the text-books on the subject. We see no reason to differ from the finding of the court below on this point. As to the question of estoppel we hold that there is no estoppel in a case of this nature. The plea of limitation in our opinion has no force. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

KASTURI AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. CHIRANJI LAL (Plaintiff).*

[25th February, 1913.]

Hindu Law—Marriage—Marriage of a Hindu girl without force or fraud but without consent of legal guardians—Maxim "factum valet."

The marriage of a Hindu girl of some 16 years of age was effected by the maternal grandfather and the maternal uncle of the girl. There was no evidence of force or fraud; but the marriage was against the wishes of the paternal relatives of the girl, who desired to make a profit by marrying her to a rich but one-eyed man called Tulshi. Held that the case was one to which the doctrine of factum valet should be applied, and the marriage was declared to be valid. Ghazi v. Sukru (2), Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu (3), Surjyamoni Dasi v. Kali Kanta Das (4), Mulchand v. Bhudhia (5), and Khushalchand Lalchand v. Bai Mani (6) referred to.

[266] THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The appellant Mt. Kasturi, a sonar (goldsmith) girl of about 16 years of age, lived after the death of her parents with her paternal relatives, namely, an uncle and two cousins. She had an younger brother. After she had lived for some months with these relatives, they brought her to the house of the plaintiff, a relative of theirs, and she lived there for about a month and a half. The paternal relatives were negotiating a not very suitable marriage for her, for pecuniary consideration. In the meantime the maternal relatives of the girl arranged her marriage with the plaintiff, and she was married to him in the presence and with the consent of her maternal grandfather, but without the knowledge of the paternal relatives. The latter came to the plaintiff's house on the day after the marriage and took the girl away with them. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Mt. Kasturi and the other defendants resisted the claim. Both the lower courts found that the marriage had been performed with all due religious ceremony, that the girl's consent had not been forced, and that no fraud had been employed. Both the courts decreed the suit.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the appellants:—

Under the Mitakshara the right of guardianship over a minor girl, including the right of giving here in marriage, vests in the following persons in successive order, namely, father, paternal grandfather, brother, other paternal relations (Sakulya), mother. The maternal grandfather does not find a place on the list. The right is with the paternal relations and the mother only comes in as the last on the list which ends with her; Macnaghten, Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law (3rd Edition) page 104 and page 204 of the second volume (Appendix). It is only under the Bengal School that the maternal relatives find a place on the list: Banerjee, Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan (1879 Edition), page 47; Bhattacharya, Hindu Law (3rd Edition), Vol. I, page 234. Yajnavalkya's order enumerated above is accepted in the Mitakshara and in the law all over India, except Bengal. The maternal grandfather, accordingly, is not a legal guardian at all and has no authority to bestow the minor in marriage. In [267] this case, the father and paternal grandfather being dead and the brother being a minor, the paternal uncle is the legal guardian. The marriage is, therefore, invalid and can be set aside. Force or fraud are not the only grounds on which a Hindu marriage can be annulled. Any sufficient reason affecting the propriety of the marriage may afford a grant for avoiding it; Banerjee, Hindu Law of marriage and Stridhan (1879 Edition), page 53. Anjona Dossee v. Proladh Chunder Ghose (1). The girl has clearly signified her unwillingness to recognize this marriage. She has attained years of discretion and her wishes should be an important factor in considering the propriety or otherwise of the marriage. She never lived with the plaintiff after the marriage. The cases of Ghazi v. Sukru (2) and Venkatacharyulu v. Kangacharyulu (3), which are relied on by the lower courts, can be distinguished. There the girl was bestowed in marriage by the mother, who is one of the legal guardians recognized by the Mitakshara.

Under the Benares School of Hindu law the maternal grandfather and other maternal relatives do find a place on the list of guardians of a female minor. Yajnavalkya and the Mitakshara stop at the mother. But the list is not exhaustive, and other commentators of the same school continue the list further on and include the maternal grandfather and others, e.g., the sages Narada and Vishnu do so; Bhattacharyya, Hindu Law (3rd Edition) Volume I, pages 233 and 234; Mayne, Hindu Law (7th Edition), page 101.

The difference between the Benares and Bengal Schools on this point is with regard to the relative position of the mother on the list. The former puts the mother before, and the latter after the maternal grandfather and maternal uncle; Trevelyan, Hindu Law, pages 42 and 43. Secondly, the rules relating to guardianship are of importance so long as the marriage rests in contract. A very different question arises where the marriage has actually been celebrated. If the marriage is duly solemnized, and there is no force or fraud, it is irrevocable. The rules are directory and not mandatory; Mayne, Hindu Law (7th Edition), [268] page 102. Golap Chandra Shastri, Hindu Law, pages 109 and 110.

I rely also on the ruling mentioned by the appellants. The finding is that the marriage with the plaintiffs is a fairly suitable one, and that there was no force or fraud employed to compel the consent of the girl to marriage with him. There are no sufficient grounds on which the marriage can be set aside.

Mr. Nihal Chand, in reply:—

Narada and Vishnu are not regarded as authorities in the Benares School; Bhattacharyya, Hindu Law (3rd Edition), Volume I, page 78, where Narada and Vishnu are not enumerated in the list of authorities followed by the Benares School. These texts, therefore, cannot override the Mitakshara, which is of paramount authority in these Provinces.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ.:—This is an appeal in a suit brought by the respondent for restitution of conjugal rights. The courts below have found that the appellant Musammat Kasturi was given in marriage to the respondent by her maternal grandfather and maternal uncle against the wishes of the appellants, Mangal, Balmakund and Joti who are paternal uncle and paternal cousins of the girl, and who hoped to make a profit out of marrying her to a rich but one-eyed man named Tulshi. It has been found also that the marriage was not brought about either by force or by fraud.

The question for decision is whether the marriage is valid. The authorities are conflicting. According to Yajnavalkya (I-63-64) the father, paternal grandfather, brother, a Sakulya or member of the same family, and the mother, in default of the first among these the next in order, if sound in mind is to give a damsel in marriage. Vishnu says (XXIV-38-39): —"The father the paternal grandfather, the brother, the kinsman, the maternal grandfather, and the mother are the persons by whom a damsel may be given in marriage." Narada says (XII-20-21):—"The father himself shall give a damsel in marriage or with his assent the brother, the maternal grandfather and maternal uncle and her agnates and her paternal grandfather. In default of all these the mother." The Mitakshara, commentary on the text of Yajnavalkya, is silent about the maternal relations (I. VII, 3-6) Most of the [269] modern commentators seem to assume that the text of Yajnavalkya and the Mitakshara commentary upon it should not be treated as exhaustive and that the maternal relatives may give a girl in marriage, though the father, brother and other paternal relatives have a preferential right to do so (see Macnaghten's Hindu Law, edition of 1874, page 103; Guru Das Banerjee's Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan, page 47; Trevelyan's Hindu Law, page 43; Ghose's Hindu Law, pages 678-688, and Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th edition, page 101). Others, such as J. N. Bhattacharjee, Chapter XIII, and Golap Chandra Shastri, Chapter III, content themselves with noticing the divergence between the authorities. It has been established by a long line of decisions, going back to 1843 that if a girl is given in marriage by her natural guardian even without the consent of her legal guardian and the marriage actually takes place, it is irrevocable [see Ghazi v. Sukru (1), Venkatacharyulu v. Rangacharyulu (2), Surjyamoni Dasi v. Kali Kanta Das (3) and Mulchand v. Bhudhia (4)] and we are asked to apply this rule to the present case. But on the findings of the courts below it may be doubted whether the persons who gave the girl in marriage were her natural guardians. It appears that her mother died several years ago ; that her father died seven or eight months before the marriage now in question, and that she and her brother aged ten lived with their paternal uncle and cousins up to within a month or two before the marriage when they took her to the respondent's house.

We have not been referred to any case at all resembling the present case. But on the other hand, there is no case, of which we are aware in which the marriage of a Hindu girl effected without force and fraud by her relations has, after it has actually taken place, been declared to be invalid for want of the consent of the legal guardian. Neither Yajnavalkya nor the Mitakshara lays down that the marriage of a girl effected without the consent of her legal guardian is invalid. In the case of Khushalchand v. Bai Mani (5) the Court held that the texts on the subject were directory rather than mandatory, that the consent of the legal guardian was not necessarily of the essence of the marriage, and [270] that it would be proper to apply the principle of factum valet to a marriage effected without such consent, but also without either force or fraud. In the present case the girl was sixteen years old at the time of the marriage: she appears to have entered upon it not unwillingly, and the object which her paternal relatives had in view in opposing her marriage with the respondent, and now have in view in resisting this suit, is the getting of a sum of money upon what would be something very like a sale of the girl to the one-eyed man Tulshi. It seems to us that this is eminently a case to which the principle of factum valet should be applied. We therefore hold that the marriage cannot now be declared void. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Under the terms of a mortgage deed executed in 1850 the mortgagee was to take possession of the mortgaged property and appropriate the rents and profits in lieu of interest. The mortgagee remained in possession up to 1889 when he was dispossessed. In 1910 he brought a suit for sale. Held, that the realization of rents and profits in lieu of interest was equivalent to the receipt of interest as such under the terms of the mortgage and therefore under section 21 of Act No. IX of 1871 the mortgagee was entitled to compute limitation from the year 1889. Act No XV of 1877 having by that time come into operation, the plaintiff was in 1910 entitled to bring his suit within the limitation provided by section 31 of Act No. IX of 1908.

THIS was a suit for sale upon a mortgage executed in 1850. The mortgage was usufructuary, the rents and profits being taken in lieu of interest on the mortgage money. The plaintiff remained in possession and realized the rents and profits down to the year 1889, when he was dispossessed. The present suit was brought in 1910. Both the lower courts decreed the claim. The defendants mortgagors appealed to the High Court, and the only point raised in appeal was that the suit was barred by limitation before Act [271] No. XV of 1877 came into force, and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of section 31 of Act No. IX of 1908.

that in pursuance of this clause in the mortgage deed the mortgagee was in possession till the year 1889, when he was dispossessed. It is argued that the claim had become time-barred before Act XV of 1877 came into operation, and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of section 31 of the Limitation Act of 1908. Section 21 of Act IX of 1871 gave a fresh start for the computation of limitation from the date of payment of interest as such. The realization of rents and profits in lieu of interest was equivalent to the receipt of interest as such under the terms of the mortgage and, therefore, under section 21 of Act IX of 1871, the plaintiff was entitled to compute limitation from the year 1889, up to which year he has been found to have received interest. Before that date Act XV of 1877 had come into operation. Therefore in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of Act IX of 1908 the plaintiff was entitled to bring his suit within two years of the date on which that Act came into force. The suit having been brought on the 10th January, 1910, was well within time. The only point raised therefore fails. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Act No. XVI of 1908 (Indian Registration Act), section 50—Registered and unregistered documents—Priority—Effect on rights of prior unregistered mortgage of sale in execution of a decree on a subsequent registered mortgage.

When property is sold in execution of a decree on a subsqunt registered mortgage taking priority over a prior unregistered mortgage suoh sale does not have the effect of invalidating the prior mortgage or of extinguishing altogether [272] the rights of the mortgagee thereunder, but his debt would still be recoverable from the surplus, if any, left after the satisfacation of the registered mortgage.

THIS was a suit by the holder of an unregistered mortgage for Rs. 95 executed on the 15th of December, 1887, by Budh Singh in favour of the defendants' predecessor in title. There had been another registered mortgage over the same property executed on the 5th of December, 1892, in favour of Sah Tejpal, in pursuance of which the mortgagee had caused the mortgaged property to be sold and had purchased it himself. Tejpal resisted the suit on the ground of such purchase. The court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree conditional on his paying to Tejpal half the amount due to him under the decree in his favour. On appeal, however, the District Judge dismissed the suit in its entirety, holding that the plaintiff's rights under his unregistered mortgage were altogether extinguished by the proceedings in respect of Tejpal's registered mortgage, The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 271=19 I. C. 783=11 A. L. J. 291.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ.:—The plaintiff in the suit sued to recover principal and interest on an unregistered mortgage deed, dated the 15th of December, 1887, to secure an advance of Rs. 95. The mortgage was executed by Budh Singh, defendant No. 1, in favour of the plaintiff's predecessor in title. Defendant No. 2 Sah Tejpal held a registered mortgage, also for Rs. 95, executed on the 5th of December, 1892, hypothecating the same property. Tejpal brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree, in execution of which he purchased the property himself. The present suit was resisted by Tejpal on the ground that he was purchaser in execution of a decree obtained on a document which by reason of registration took effect against the unregistered document held by the plaintiff. The court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree conditional on his paying half the amount due to Tejpal defendant No. 2, under the mortgage deed in the latter's favour. Tejpal defendant No 2 appealed to the lower appellate court. In his memorandum of appeal various grounds were taken. But the lower appellate court has decided the appeal on one ground only. Tejpal contended that as he was a purchaser at an auction sale held in execution of a decree on a [273] mortgage having priority over the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff the rights of the plaintiff were altogether extinguished. The lower appellate court upheld this contention and without considering the other pleas raised in the appeal decreed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit in toto. In second appeal it is contended that the view taken by the lower appellate court is wrong. Section 50 of the Registration Act provides that a registered document of the kind mentioned in clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of section 17 and clauses (a) and (b) of section 18 shall, if duly registered, take effect as regards the property comprised therein against an unregistered document relating to the same property. The defendant Tejpal relies on his purchase in execution of a decree obtained by him on a registered mortgage. What he purchased at the auction sale was the right, title and interest of his mortgagor. The mortgage held by the plaintiff, although not created by a registered document, was not invalid merely by reason of the document not being registered. If a valid mortgage was created by that document the debt secured was recoverable from the surplus, if any, left after the satisfaction of the registered mortgage held by Tejpal. As the only point decided by the lower appellate court was that the rights of the plaintiff were altogether extinguished, and as we are unable to agree with that view, we must allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the case to that court for decision of other questions raised in the appeal before that court

Cost of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

[11th and 12th February and 14th March, 1913.]

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissionor of Oudh.]

Vendor and purchaser—Sale to raise funds for litigation—Transfer whilst vendor was out of possession—Agreement depending on success of litigation—Transfer of undivided share in joint ancestral property—Interest in property giving right to sue—Vendee and provider of funds made co-plaintiffs.

The original plaintiffs in the two suits out of which these appeals arose were in one suit the sons, and in the other the grandson of the heads and [274] managers of two distinct joint Hindu families, owners of an estate in Oudh, by whom alienations of the joint ancestral property had been made in favour of the appellant, whom they sued in ejectment to set aside those alienations on the ground that the managing members had no power to make them. As they required funds to enable them to prosecute the suits, they entered into agreements with a third person (who was made a co-plaintiff in the suits and was now respondent) to the effect that " in the share of each of them in the property he will be a co-sharer of a one-half share, and the remaining one-half share will, belong to us . . . He will bear the entire expenses in connexion with the suit, and in case of success he will be entitled to proprietary possession of the above mentioned one-half share, or one-half of the share which may be decreed which can remain joint or be partitioned by him as he pleases." In the course of the litigation the original plaintiffs compromised the suits with the appellant and withdrew from them leaving the respondent to prosecute them alone.

Held (reversing on this point the decision of the Courts in India) that the agreements (which constituted his only right to sue) conferred upon the respondent no present right to the possession of any share in the property in suit. He would only have the right to possession in case of success, and success had not been achieved. Until then he was merely a co-owner in a certain undivided share of the property. There was no present grant or assignment to him of any separate share of the property, divided or undivided, and he could not therefore maintain the suit.

THREE consolidated appeals from the judgments and decrees (19th March, 1909, and 29th March, 1911) of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which partly affirmed and partly reversed judgments and decrees (22nd July, 1908, and 5th February, 1910) of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, and of the District Judge of Rae Bareli respectively.

For the determination of the only question decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in these appeals, the facts will be found fully stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The original plaintiffs in the two suits out of which these appeals arose, were, in the first suit, Sheopal Singh and Chandra Bhukan Singh, the two sons of Binda Sewak Singh ; and in the second suit, Bhopal Singh, the grandson of Ram Prasad Singh. Binda Sewak and Ram Prasad were the heads of the two distinct joint families of which the plaintiffs were respectively junior members. Together Binda Sewak and Ram Prasad were owners of the village of Lohangpur in the Partabgarh district of Oudh, which was ancestral property ; Binda Sewak and his [275] family owning a 7 anna 2 pie share, and Ram Prasad and his family an 8 anna 10 pie share. The suits were brought to recover the undivided shares of the respective plaintiffs, in the estate on the ground that certain alienations made by Binda Sewak and Ram Prasad in favour of the principal defendant in each suit (the present appellant) were made without legal necessity, and were therefore not binding on the plaintiffs.

Being in want of funds to enable them to prosecute their suits, the plaintiffs had by two formal deeds transferred a moiety of their respective shares of the estate to one Mahabir Prasad (the present respondent) in consideration of his finding the money to pay for the expenses of the suits; and Mahabir was thereupon joined as a co-plaintiff in each suit. One of the agreements (which were similar in terms) is set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The suits were defended by Basant Lal, whose material pleas were that the alienations were made for family necessity and were binding on the plaintiffs; and that the plaintiff Mahabir Prasad had no existing interest in the property in suit. During the progress of the suits in the courts below the defendant Basant Lal came to a compromise in each suit with the original plaintiff; and Mahabir Prasad was eventually left to carry on the suits as sole plaintiff.

There were two main questions therefore for decision, (a) whether Mahabir Prasad had sufficient interest in the property to enable him to maintain the suit, and (b) whether the alienations sought to be set aside were or were not binding on the plaintiffs.

Of these the first question was not much discussed by the lower courts, the Subordinate Judge in the first suit merely holding on an issue raised that Mahabir had an existing right, and, after dismissing the suit on the second question, (holding that the alientions were binding) saying :— " The suit however cannot fail altogether as plaintiff No. 3 (Mahabir Prasad) has acquired an interest in half the property," and the Judicial Commissioner's Court agreeing that Mahabir Prasad was by the agreement "admitted as a partner to the extent of one half of the property."

Both suits were eventually disposed of on the second question by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner (Mr. E. Chamier, [276] Judicial Commissioner, and Mr. T. C. Piggott, 2nd Additional Judicial Commissioner) in favour of the present respondent (1) on the authority of a decision of a Full Bench in the case of Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (2).

On these appeals—

De Gruyther, K. C, and B. Dube for the appellant contended that the alienations were binding on the plaintiffs. In the absence of any allegation that the debts, to satisfy which the alienations had been made, were incurred for immoral purposes, the alienations, as having been made by the heads of the joint families, were binding upon the other members of the familes. The burden of proof that they were not binding was in any case on the plaintiffs, and they had failed to discharge it. The manager of a joint Hindu family had certain limited powers of alienation and where the joint family consisted of a father and his sons, the father had all those powers, and he also possessed the power to alienate the joint ancestral property for his antecedent debts, and the sons were liable unless those debts were tainted with immorality. Reference was made to Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (3): Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Proshad

But it was contended that the respondent Mahabir Prasad was not entitled to carry on the suits, as he had, on the true construction of the agreements with the original plaintiffs, no title or interest to enable him to sue, especially after the withdrawal of the other plaintiffs as the result of compromising the suits. The suits were a mere gambling in litigation. The transferors were out of possession of the property, and the transferee acquired no title under the deeds. The case of Achal Ram v. Kazim Husain Khan (6) was referred to and distinguished.

[277] G. R. Lowndes for the respondent Mahabir Prasad contended that he had acquired a title under the agreements with the original plaintiffs which enabled him to maintain the suit. He was under these agreements a co-sharer with the original plaintiffs in the property. Both the Courts in India had decided that on the construction of the deed Mahabir Prasad had an existing right. In the present case, as in the case of Achal Ram v. Kazim Husain Khan (6), the agreements operated as a "present transfer" to the respondent Mahabir Prasad of the interest of the original plaintiffs. As to the alienations, it was contended that they were not within the competence of the alienors and were not binding on the original plaintiffs, nor on the respondent their transferee. They were not made for legal necessity nor required for the discharge of antecedent debts of the alienors. The decision of the majority of the Full Bench in the case of Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (5), on which the Judicial Commissioner's Court had relied, was correct.

Counsel for the appellant were not called upon to reply.

1913, March 14*th* :—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Lord ATKINSON :—

These are three consolidated appeals from three decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, the first dated the 19th of March, 1909, and the other two the 29th of March, 1911.

By the first of these, certain decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, dated the 22nd of July, 1908, were in part affirmed and in part reversed, and by the two latter a judgment and decree of the District Judge of Rae Bareli, dated the 5th of February, 1910, was also in part affirmed and in part reversed.

By this decree of the 5th of February, 1910, a previous decree of the same Subordinate Judge, dated the 3rd of August, 1909, was in part affirmed and in part reversed.

The facts out of which all this litigation has arisen are shortly as follows :—

A certain estate in five villages in the Partabgarh district was owned by two joint Hindu families, the respective heads of which were two brothers Binda Sewak and Ram Prasad, the share of the [278] said Binda Sewak's branch being 7 annas 2 pies and that of Ram Prasad's branch 8 annas 10 pies.

A genealogical table set out in the respondent's case, the accuracy of which is not disputed, shows of what members these two families were composed :—

The persons whose names are printed in italics are plaintiffs in the two suits, numbered 518 and 549 of 1907, in which the decrees appealed from were respectively made, namely, Sheopal Singh and Chandra Bhukhan Singh in the first, and Bhopal Singh in the second. In each of these suits one Mahabir Prasad, not a member of either family, but claiming an interest in portions of the joint family property under certain agreements, was joined as a plaintff.

By two deeds, dated respectively the 2nd of January, 1900, and 3rd of October, 1901, Binda Sewak purported to sell to Basant Singh (the appellant) his share of the joint family property.

Thereupon Ram Prasad, as co-sharer in the family estate, instituted two pre-emption suits in respect of these two sales, and obtained decrees therein. He subsequently, by deeds, dated the 4th of June, 1903, and 3rd of August, 1903, respectively, purported to sell and convey to the same Basant Singh (the appellant) the share of the property the right to which he had thus acquired by pre-emption, together with all but a 6 anna share of his own share of the family property. In addition he, by deed dated the 4th of February, 1907, mortgaged this latter 6 anna share to the same Basant Singh to secure a sum of Rs. 12,000. The mortgage was a possessory mortgage for a period of 25 years. Sheopal Singh, Chandra Bhukhan Singh and Bhopal Singh determined to impeach all these dealings with the joint family properties as [279] being, on several grounds, void according to Hindu law, but they had no money to meet the cost of litigation.

Two agreements, both dated the 25th of April, 1907, were accordingly entered into between them and Mahabir Prasad, the one by Sheopal Singh and Chandra Bhukhan Singh jointly and the other by Bhopal Singh. They are practically identical in terms. They provided that Mahabir Prasad should in each case finance the contemplated litigation on certain terms to be presently considered in detail.

Two actions were accordingly instituted in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, the first on the 10th of August, 1907, in which Sheopal Singh, Bhukhan Singh and Mahabir Prasad were plaintiffs, and Basant Singh, Binda Sewak Singh and Ram Prasad defendants, praying for "a decree for proprietary and actual possession of 4 annas 9 pies 6¾ karants under-proprietary share" in five villages therein named and for Rs. 1,704-14-9 33/36 mesne profits. In other words, it was an action of ejectment and for recovery of mesne rates.

In the second suit Bhopal Singh and Mahabir Prasad were plaintiffs, and Ram Prasad and his grandsons Bijai Bahadur Singh and Raghubar Singh defendants. The relief claimed was similar, namely, to recover possession of one-sixth of the property conveyed away by Ram Prasad by the three deeds already mentioned.

In both suits a plea was filed to the effect that Mahabir Prasad was not entitled to recover possession. That point was thus distinctly raised. Both suits were contested, and both heard together.

The principal defendant in the first suit, by deed, dated the 22nd of April, 1908, compromised with the two principal plaintiffs in that suit, namely, Sheopal Singh and Chandra Bhukhan. The deed provided, amongst other things, that the claim of these plaintiffs to recover the possession of the lands mentioned should be dismissed, and their claim for mesne profits rejected. This deed was filed in court, and on an application made under section 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the suit was dismissed as against these plaintiffs. A similar compromise was entered into in the second suit with Bhopal Singh, and that suit was similarly [280] dismissed as against him. Mahabir Prasad thus became the sole plaintiff in both suits. His claim to recover the possession of the shares of the property mentioned in them respectively thus rests entirely upon the agreements he so entered into with these plaintiffs. Even if all the impeached deeds were absolutely void, he would not be entitled to the relief he claims unless these agreements conferred upon him a right to recover possession of the undivided shares of these villages of which he seeks to recover the possession. The agreements thus become the foundation of his title. Until their true construction and the nature of the rights they confer have been determined, it is irrelevant to consider the question of the validity or invalidity of the deeds. The other is the preliminary question, and it has not only been raised, but actually ruled upon by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment delivered upon the 22nd of July, 1908. In the last paragraph but one of this he, when dealing with the seventh issue, said :—"The suit, however, cannot fail altogether, as was contended by defendant 1. Plaintiff 3 has acquired an interest as to half the property." This seventh issue ran thus :—"To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled?" Owing to the compromise, that issue came to mean, to what relief is the third plaintiff, Mahabir Prasad, entitled? And the last of the reasons stated in the appellant's case lodged in these appeals is that the respondent, Mahabir Prasad, is "not entitled to possession of the property in suit or to any other relief." It may well be that this question, though raised, was not much discussed, or not at all discussed on the hearing of the appeals before the court of the Judicial Commissioner, but since the point arises on the very face of the documents on which the plaintiff's case is founded, their Lordships think they are bound to decide it. It would be quite impossible for them to advise His Majesty to grant to a litigant relief to which, they were of opinion he was not entitled, simply because those concerned for the parties in the cause abstained from discussing in the court from which the appeal to His Majesty had been taken a vital point plainly appearing on the very face of his written proofs, and plainly raised, as this point has been, in this case.

As the two agreements are practically identical in terms, it will be sufficient to consider one of them.

[281] It is elementary law that a plaintiff in an action of ejectment must recover by the strength of his own title, not the weakness of his adversary's.

What may be the rights or interests, if any, which the plaintiff may have under these agreements in the subject-matter of the suit are irrelevant considerations if he has not a right to the possession he seeks to recover.

The primary question for decision, therefore, is, did the agreement in the first action confer upon Mahabir Prasad at the time that action was instituted a then present right to that possession? There is no suggestion that if he had not the right then he has since acquired it.

The provisions of the agreement setting forth the conditions upon which it was entered into, relevant on this point, run as follows :—

"1. That in the share of each declarant amounting to 2 annas 4 pies and 13⅓ karants Mahabir Prasad will be a co-sharer of one-half share, and the remaining one-half share will belong to us, the declarants, as follows :—

Sheopal Singh	... 2 annas 4 pies 13⅓rd karant share.
Chandra Bhukhan Singh	... 2 ,, 4 ,, 13⅓rd ,, ,,

"2. We, the declarants and Mahabir Prasad, will be bound by the following conditions :—

(a) That Mahabir Prasad will bear the entire expenses in connection with the suit from the original Court to the Court of Appeal from his own pocket in the way he pleases, and if the opposite party prefer any appeal, then Mahabir Prasad will have to defend the appeal also with his own costs.

(b) That in case of success Mahabir Prasad will be entitled to proprietary possession of the share entered in paragraph 1 of this document or one-half of the share which may be decreed, and it will be at the pleasure of Mahabir Prasad either to keep his share joint or to have it partitioned. But during the period of jointness he will have all rights to making collections and management of the zamindari share decreed.

(c) That Mahabir Prasad will remain a co-sharer and proprietor like ourselves in all the sir and khudkasht lands and all zamindari rights relating to the zamindari share like ourselves, and we will have no right to keep separate possession over any sir and khudkasht land, nor will we raise any plea as to exproprietary right."

In the view of their Lordships these provisions did not confer upon Mahabir Prasad a then present right to the possession of any share in the property the subject-matter of the suit. That right would arise, if at all, only when success in the contemplated [282] litigation had been achieved. Success had not been achieved. By the agreement it was contracted that up to that time, at all events, he, Mahabir Prasad, should merely be a partner, or co-owner with his co-plaintiffs in a certain undivided fraction of the property mentioned in the first of its paragraphs. There was no present grant or assignment to him of any separate share or fraction of the property divided or undivided. At best the contract only amounted to this, that in a certain future event he should become entitled to the proprietary possession of a certain undivided fraction of it, and then have the right to have that fraction partitioned.

The case of Lal Achal Ram v. Raja Kazim Husain Khan (1) is wholly different from the present. There the sole owner of certain lands, who had already sold one-half of them, executed a deed of sale in which it was set forth that "he has sold half the estate to the Raja for a lakh and a half of rupees." He acknowledged the receipt of one lakh, the balance was to be paid on the termination of certain litigation, which the Raja was to conduct at his own expense. The statement of the amount of the consideration was no doubt exaggerated. But the vendor never impeached his deed as not being a valid transfer of the property. On the contrary, he had more than once affirmed it, urged the Raja to take proceedings founded upon it, and continued to receive payments due to himself under it. The terms of the instrument are not set out at length in the report of the case, but Lord Macnaghten in delivering the judgment of the Board, after dealing with all the facts and quoting from the deed the passage already mentioned, says, at page 121 of the report (1):—" Their Lordships agree with the judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner that the transaction was a present transfer by Ardawan (the sole owner) of one moiety of his interest in the estate giving a good title to Raja on which it was competent for him to sue." The case cannot be relied upon as a guide to the true construction of the agreements in the present case.

On that construction their Lordships are clearly of opinion that neither agreement by its terms confers upon the respondent Mahabir Prasad any present right to recover the possession of [283] the share of the property mentioned in it which he claims to recover. They accordingly think that these appeals should be allowed, that the three judgments and decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, dated the 19th of March, 1909, and the 29th of March, 1911, respectively, should be set aside, that the two judgments and decrees of the lower Courts, namely, that dated the 3rd of August, 1909, of the Subordinate Judge and that of the District Judge of Rae Bareli, dated the 5th of February, 1910, should also be set aside, and that both the suits should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. Held that, apart from positive testimony on the point, the performance of the worship of the idol in accordance with the rites of the sect for whose benefit it was held, might be treated as good evidence of dedication, and the ordinary rule of Hindu law relating to the descent of private property was not applicable.

Held also that the rule that the heirs of the founder succeed to the sebaitship laid down in Gossamee Sree Greedharreejee v. Rumanlolljee Gossamee (1) was, as there implied, subject to the condition that the devolution in the ordinary line of descent is not inconsistent with or opposed to the purpose the founder had in view in establishing the worship. In the present case the appellants being Bhats, and not belonging to the Gossain kul were not competent to be sebaits of a Ballav temple where the rites were performed according to the Ballav [284] ritual, which, it was clearly established they could not perform. To allow their claim would defeat the purpose for which the worship was established.

Held further that the respondent had established an independent title of his own to the temple as being the nearest male relative of Muttuji both being descendants of two full brothers. The idol in the temple was brought from his temple at Nathdwara, and the worship founded by Muttuji was an off-shoot of the worship at Nathdwara. The temple was also built on land belonging to the Tekait respondent with the permission of his ancestor who held the office of Tekait at the time. He had therefore a clear title according to the customs and usages of the Ballav kul to the sebaitship of the temple.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (28th February, 1910) of the High Court at Allahabad, which affirmed a judgment and decree (5th August, 1907) of the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Agra, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, dismissing the appellants' suit.

The facts of this case, which is an appeal from the decision of the High Court (RICHARDS and TUDBALL, JJ.) reported in Indian Law Reports, 32 Allahabad, 461, sufficiently appear from the judgment in that case, and are also stated in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee.

On this appeal—

De Gruyther, K. C. and Ross, K. C., for the appellants contended that the burden lay on the respondents to prove the custom they alleged of the exclusion of the sons of daughters of the founder by his male kinsmen and that they had failed to discharge it. The High Court had wrongly placed the burden of proof on the appellants to show that they, the daughters' sons, were entitled to succeed. The question was on whom the onus lay. Did it lie on the appellants who alleged that the orininary Hindu law was applicable, or on the respondents who set up a special custom (contrary to the Hindu law) which, they contended, applied and governed the present case? Reference was made to Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (2); Gossamee Sree Greedharreejee v. Rumanlolljee Goswamee (1); Greedharee Doss v. Nundokissore Doss (3); Muttu Ramalinga Setupati v. Perianayagum Pillai (4), Genda Puri v. Chatar Puri (5) and Janoki Deti v. Gopal Acharjia Goswami (6). 1913, March 17*th*.—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Mr. AMEER ALI:—

35 A. 283=40 I. A. 97=19 I. C. 337=17 C. W. N. 741 =11 A. L. J. 548=17 C. L. J. 612=15 Bom. L. R. 606=1913 M. W. N. 536= 14 M. L. T. 27.

The dispute in this case relates to the shebaitship of a Hindu temple belonging to the Ballavacharya Gossains situated at a place called Jatipura in the Muttra district of the United Provinces of India.

The Ballavacharya cult, in reality an offshoot of Vaishnavism, was founded in the 16th century of the Christian Era by one Ballavacharya, who is usually designated among his followers and disciples as Maha Pirbhuji. He and his descendants, who constitute the Ballavacharya Gossain Kul, are held in great veneration by the members of the sect and regarded as the incarnation of the famous and favourite Hindu deity Krishna, whom in common with other Vaishnavs (Vishnuvites) they worship. The cult established by Ballavacharya differed in several particulars from the practices in vogue among other votaries of Krishna, the principal point of difference consisting in the fact that he repudiated the practice of celibacy and asceticism practised by the other Gossains.

The Ballavacharya Gossains, in other words, the descendants of Ballav, possess several principal temples, each of which is presided over by a member of his Kul or family, who is styled a Tikait.

The defendant Gordhan Lalji is in possession of one of the most important of these temples, if not the most important, which is situated at Nathdwara in the Odeypore State.

In order to make the contentions of the parties intelligible, it is necessary to state in this connection certain admitted facts relating to the customs and usages in vogue among the Ballavacharya Kul.

[286] In the first place the Ballavacharyas do not intermarry in their own Kul, as the members belong to the same gotra. They take wives from among the Bhats, a well-known Brahmanical caste, and marry their daughters to Bhats.

In the Ballavacharya Gossain temples, besides the principal image, which is directly or indirectly a presentment of Krishna, there are subsidiary images not enjoying the same worship or veneration but nevertheless regarded as representations of Krishna They are almost invariably images of one or other of the descendants of Maha Pirbhuji.

Another fact necessary to bear in mind is that the ministrations in the Ballavacharya temples are entirely in the hands of the direct descendants of the founder, and the Gossains of his Kul are the preceptors of the cult taught by him.

The temple which forms the subject-matter of dispute in the present case is stated to have been built about the time of the Indian Mutiny, by one Muttuji, a descendent of Ballav and thus a member of his Kul. The worship he set up in this new temple was of the image of Sri Madan Mohanji, which is proved to have been brought from the Tikait defendant's temples at Nathdwara. This was one of the subsidiary images that were worshipped there along with the principal deity.

Muttuji remained in possession of the temple built by him and of the worship performed there until his death in 1883. He left a widow, Satbinda Bahuji, and two daughters, Musammat Ganga Beti and Gordhana Beti. After the death of Muttuji, his widow, Satbinda, carried on the worship until 1888 when she died, and the charge of the temple devolved on Ganga and Gordhana. Ganga died in 1896 and Gordhana in 1902. Both Ganga and Gordhana were married, according to the custom of the sect, to Bhat husbands and their sons are accordingly called Bhats. The plaintiffs, Mohan Lalji and Gordhan Lalji, are the sons of Ganga, whilst the defendant, Madhusudan Lala, is the surviving son of Gordhana, and Damodar Lala is her husband.

On the death of Gordhana, these two, together with Anrudh Lala, another of her sons, who was alive at the time, appear to have taken possession of the temple. In 1904 a suit was instituted by the defendant Tikait Gordhan Lalji, against Damodar and [287] his two sons to establish his title to the shebaitship, and for possession of the temple. This suit was referred to arbitration, and an award was made in his favour under which he obtained possession.

During the pendency of that suit, the plaintiffs, the sons of Ganga, brought the present action against Damodar and his two sons for joint possession of the temple and its appurtenances. On the 25th of August, 1905, Tikait Gordhan Lalji was added as a defendant to the suit of Musammat Ganga's sons.

The plaintiff's claim against Gordhan Lalji is for ejectment; whilst against the other defendants it is for joint possession. They allege that Muttuji, their maternal grandfather, was the owner of the temple with all its appurtenances; that on his death his widow came into possession of the same by right of inheritance; and that upon her death their mother and their aunt "became the owners of the temple." And they claim to be entitled on the death of Gordhana to joint possession with her husband and sons to an equal share as "owners". It will be noted that they based their right on the ordinary right of inheritance under the Hindu Law.

The Tikait, the real contesting defendant, denied the title put forward by the plaintiffs. He urged that the temple was not the personal property of Muttuji and that the right of inheritance did not attach to it. He further alleged that, according to the custom in force among the Ballavacharyas, daughter's sons did not belong to their Kul and were debarred from taking part in the ministrations at the temple for the benefit of the worshippers; and he claimed that, as a collateral relative of Muttuji in the male line, he was entitled to succeed him as shebait.

He also alleged that the temple was built by Muttuji on land belonging to his (the defendant's) father with his permission, and that on Muttuji's death without leaving any lawful heir the right to the possession devolved on him by virtue of an agreement executed by Muttuji.

On these respective allegations of the parties the Trial Judge framed a number of issues, only four of which need attention. The second and third put in issue the incapacity alleged by the defendant of daughter's sons succeeding to their maternal grandfathers or taking part in the worship at a Ballav temple. The fourth [288] raised the question whether the property was debuttur. The fifth dealt with the claim of the defendant to succeed to the shebaitship by right of heirship to Muttuji.

The Subordinate Judge, on an exhaustive review of the evidence, held on all the issues against the plaintiffs and accordingly dismissed the suit. His decision has been affirmed on appeal by the High Court of Allahabad.

From the decree of the High Court the plaintiffs have appealed to His Majesty in Council. They, or rather their advisers, abandoned, if not in the first court, certainly in the High Court, their contention that the temple in suit with the appurtenances formed the private property of Muttuji subject to the ordinary law of inheritance. In the High Court the case was discussed and decided on the admission of the plaintiffs' counsel that the property in suit was debutter. In fact, in their Lordships' judgment, the evidence left no room for the opposite contention, for, apart from positive testimony directly bearing on the point, the performance of the worship in accordance with the rites of the sect for whose benefit it was held may be treated as good evidence of dedication. That being so, the ordinary rule of Hindu Law relating to the descent of private property is not applicable to the particular right in controversy in this case.

Stress, however, is laid on the printiple enunciated in Gossamee Sree Greedharreejee v. Rumunlolljee Gossamee (1), where Lord Hobhouse, delivering the judgment of this Board, said as follows:—

> "According to Hindu Law, when the worship of a thakoor has been founded, the shebaitship is held to be vested in the heirs of the founder, in default of evidence that he has disposed of it otherwise, or there has been some usage, course of dealing, or some circumstances to show a different mode of devolution."

This rule must, from the very nature of the right, be subject to the condition that the devolution in the ordinary line of descent is not inconsistent with or opposed to the purpose the founder had in view in establishing the worship. This qualification is in fact covered by the words used by Lord Hobhouse.

Starting from this point, the first question to determine is whether the plaintiffs suing for the joint exercise of the right of [289] shebaitship to the temple in suit, have established their competency for the office. The duties which are imposed on the person in charge of the temple and of its worship are to be found very comprehensively set forth in Professor Hayman Wilson's "Religious sects of the Hindus." Both the courts in India have found that the plaintiffs, being Bhats, and not belonging to the Gossain Kul, cannot perform the diurnal rites for the deity worshipped by the sect; they cannot wash, dress or adorn the image or perform the arti (one of the most important rites) which seems to consist in waving the light before the image of the deity. They cannot touch the food offerings placed before the idols, which are afterwards distributed among the Vaishnava votaries. Nor can they communicate the mantras to the disciple for purposes of initiation. It is to be noted in this connection, that whilst the daughters of the Ballav Gossains married to Bhat husbands continue to live in their father's houses and remain within their father's Kul, their sons do not acquire that status; as sons of Bhats they are Bhats, and not Ballavacharya Gossains who are by virtue of their descent entitled to act as ministers of the cult established by Ballav Maha Pirbhuji.

Another fact is equally clear on the evidence that Bhat girls married into the Gossain Kul receive the mantras and become thenceforth members of the Kul. It is not surprising, therefore, that after Muttuji's death his widow and daughters remained in charge of the temple and it worship. But to allow the plaintiffs' claim to an admittedly Ballav temple, where the rites are performed according to Ballav ritual, which, it is clearly established, they cannot perform, would, in their Lordships' judgment, defeat the purpose for which the worship was established.

In an action of ejectment the conclusion at which their Lordships have arrived would be sufficient for the affirmance of the decree appealed against dismissing the plaintiffs' suit.

But their Lordships are of opinion that the Tikait defendant has succeeded in establishing an independent title of his own to the temple in suit. He appears to be the nearest male relative of Muttuji, both being descendants of two full brothers; there can be little doubt, also, that the image installed at Jatipura was brought from his temple at Nathdwara, and that the worship founded [290] by Muttuji was an off-shoot of the worship in Nathdwara. The temple, again, was built on land belonging to the Tikait defendant, with the permission of his ancestor, who held the office of Tikait at the time.

It seems to their Lordships that, apart from the statements contained in Muttuji's letter, on which the defendant relied in his written statement, he has a clear title, according to the customs and usages of the Ballav Kul, to the shebaitship of the temple in suit.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment and decree of the High Court are right, and that this appeal must be dismissed. And they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The appellants will pay the costs.

EMPEROR v. TULSHI RAM.*

[28th February, 1913.]

Act No. II of 1899 (Indian Stamp Act), sections 2 (23), 62 and 63—Sarkhat—Memorandum of account—Receipt—Several items of over Rs. 20 each—Each item to be stamped.

Held that a memorandum of account between debtor and creditor, which was left in the possession of the debtor and consisted of items entered from time to time of money advanced and repaid, was a document which required a separate receipt stamp in respect of each item of over Rs. 20.

ONE Tulshi Ram was in the habit of borrowing money from time to time from a money-lender. The account of the sums of money borrowed and repaid was left in the hands of the debtor, and consisted of a paper upon which such sums were entered as occasion arose in opposite columns. When the account was finally closed, a balance of Rs. 50 odd was paid and one receipt stamp attached and signed by the creditor firm. The receipt stamp was not cancelled. The debtor Tulshi Ram was on these facts convicted under section 62 of the Stamp Act, 1899, on the finding [291] that each entry of a receipt for over Rs. 20 required to be stamped separately. He was also convicted under section 63 of the Act. Tulshi Ram applied in revision to the High Court.

Munshi Lakshmi Narain, for the applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson) for the Crown.

TUDBALL, J.—In this case the applicant has been convicted under sections 62 and 63 of Act II of 1899 in respect of what has been called a sarkhat throughout the case. This sarkhat is a document on a piece of paper which appears to have been written up from time to time. It shows on one side sums of money advanced, and on the opposite side various sums of money repaid by the debtor. When the account was finally closed, a balance of Rs. 50 odd was paid and one receipt stamp attached and signed by the creditor firm. The receipt stamp was not cancelled. The Magistrate has held that the entry in respect of each of the items of receipt of over Rs. 20, is an acknowledgement within the definition of the word "receipt" in section 2, clause (23), of the Act, and that each of such entries should have been stamped, and he has, therefore, convicted the accused under section 62 of the Act. In respect of the non-cancelment of the receipt stamp affixed, he has convicted him under section 63. There cannot be any doubt that the sarkhat was written up from time to time and that it was left in the hands of the debtor, so that the entry of each item of payment and receipt might be entered thereon to act as an acknowledgement of payments and receipts. When each item of receipt was entered by the creditor therein, there can be no doubt that the memorandum imported an acknowledgement of a part-payment of the debt, and as each entry was made it ought to have been stamped with a receipt stamp. Technically, therefore, the applicant was guilty, and as only a nominal fine has been imposed, there is no reason for interference on the question of sentence. The conviction under section 63 is of course good. The application is rejected.

[292] APPELLATE CIVIL.

BHAGWAN DAS AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. MUHAMMAD YAHIA (Plaintiff).*

[1st March, 1913.]

Landholder and tenant—House in abadi*—Well sunk by tenant inside his house—Mandatory injunction—Discretion of Court.*

In this case the High Court refused to grant a mandatory injunction at the suit of the zamindar for the removal of a well recently constructed inside their house by tenants of a house in a town; the position of the tenants being that they and their predecessors in title had paid no rent for generations, and were only liable to ejectment in the event of the site occupied by them being cleared of buildings.

IN this case the plaintiff was the zamindar of a patti in the town of Mariahu. The defendants were tenants of a house in the patti, but they had never paid rent, and were apparently only liable to ejectment in the possible event of the site occupied by them becoming denuded of buildings. The defendants started to build a well inside their house. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit praying for an injunction restraining the defendants from building their well and directing them to restore the land to its original condition. The court of first instance held that the defendants were entitled to build the well and accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal, however, the lower appellate court reversed this decision. The defendants appealed to the Hight Court.

Mr. S. A. Haidar (with him Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji), for the appellants :—

A tenant who occupies a house in the village abadi can make improvements in his house. He can do any reasonable thing which will add to the comforts and conveniences thereof ; Balkishen v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (1), Bholai v. The Rajah of Bansi (2). A well is a reasonable improvement ; it is a necessary adjunct or appurtenance to a house. The plot of land was given by the zamindar for the purpose of a house. The sinking of a well inside the house is not an act inconsistent with that purpose, and is not destructive of or permanently injurious to the land. The wajib-ul-arz gives to each tenant the unrestricted power to build or to [293] demolish within his compound at his own pleasure. This power includes the right of sinking a well therein as an appurtenance to the house. The construction of a well in a house is so common that it must be presumed that such a contingency was contemplated at the time when the wajib-ul-arz was framed. If the zamindar had intended to disallow wells there would certainly have been an express provision in the wajib-ul-arz prohibiting them.

Mr. C Dillon (with him Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman), for the respondents :—

In an agricultural village, such as the village Mariahu was at one time, the grant of a piece of land to build a house thereon does not carry with it a right to sink a well. The main purpose is that of agriculture. The wajib-ul-arz contains provision by which tenants are empowered to make pakka wells. The sinking of wells would be permanently injurious to the rights of the zamindar. If it be held that the appellants can, as a matter of right, sink a well, then each and every tenant can do likewise, and there would be nothing to prevent a tenant from constructing more wells than one if he so chose. This would be destructive and permanently injurious to the zamindar's land. The case in the Weekly Notes for 1898, cited by the appellants, lays down that a tenant may make improvements in his house only so long as he can do so without injury to the rights of the zamindar. The second case cited by the appellants is not in point, as it relates to wells constructed on land used for agricultural purposes. A tenant has only a limited interest in the site of the house occupied by him, and cannot make permanent alterations in that site.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, replied.

GRIFFIN, J.—The plaintiff in this case is the zamindar of a patti in the town of Mariahu, where the defendants reside. The plaintiff brought this suit for an injunction to restrain the defendants from constructing a well in their house and for an order directing them to remove the materials and to restore the land to its original condition. The defendants are shop-keepers whose family has been in occupation of the premises for generations without paying any rent. They pleaded that they had a right to construct the well on their premises, that the well had been constructed for their own comfort and convenience, and that the suit was brought out of malice. The court of first instance dismissed [294] the suit, holding that the construction of the well inside the house was not such a user as affected the zamindar's rights injuriously, and that the well was a necessary adjunct to the comfort of the occupants of the house. lower appellate court on appeal held that the plaintiff zamindar was entitled to the relief asked for on the ground that the construction of the well was an interference with the plaintiff's right as zamindar. The lower appellate court having decreed the suit the defendants come here in second appeal. The courts below find that the occupiers of houses in Mariahu have a right to transfer houses subject to payment of one-fourth of the sale price to the zamindar. We have heard the learned counsel for the parties at considerable length. The question, as it appears to me, for decision, in this appeal is whether the plaintiff has made out a case for issue of an injunction. The plaintiff is the zamindar of the patti where the defendants' house is situated. His rights as zamindar appear to be limited by the rights which occupants of houses have acquired by custom against the zamindar so long as the houses are in the occupation of the family. The houses only escheat to the zamindar in case of the family dying out. I am unable to hold that the construction of the well on the premises of the defendants is a breach of any obligation existing in favour of the plaintiff whether expressly or by implication. A well on the premises is an undoubted adjunct to the convenience of the occupants, and it is difficult to see in what way the zamindar's interests are injuriously affected by its construction ; while its removal would undoubtedly cause inconvenience to the defendants. If there be an invasion of the zamindar's rights it is of so slight and doubtful a nature as not to call for interference, more particularly in view of the fact that the chance of the zamindar entering into possession of the house is very remote. There appears to be some reason for holding, as held by the court of first instance, that the plaintiff was actuated by malice in instituting the present suit. Taking all the circumstances into consideration I am of opinion that this is not a case in which the injunction asked for should be granted. I would therefore allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit.

CHAMIER, J.—I agree that this appeal should be allowed. The appellants are the owners and occupiers of a shop and an adjoining [295] house in qasba Mariahu. The respondent is the zamindar of the qasba. The question for decision is whether the appellants are entitled to sink a well inside the shop without the permission of the respondent. It has been found by the courts below, and it is now admitted by the appellants, that the respondent is the exclusive owner of the land on which the house and shop stand, but that the appellants are entitled to retain possession as long as the buildings remain on the land. The Munsif held that the appellants were entitled to sink the well without the respondent's permission. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that they were not.

It must be taken that the predecessors of the appellants obtained the land from the zamindar for the time being, for the purpose of erecting buildings thereon, and that they agreed expressly or impliedly not to use the land for any other purpose. Therefore, if the acts now complained of are inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was given to the appellants' predecessors, the repondent is entitled to a mandatory injunction. It was not suggested by counsel for the appellants that a mandatory injunction was not a suitable form of relief or that any other relief would meet the case. In this connection I may note that it was admitted before us that the respondent objected to the construction of the well as soon as he came to know of it.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 292=18 I. C. 928=11 A. L. J. 301.

Two provisions in the wajib-ul-arz have been referred to. One of them certainly has no bearing upon the case. It relates to the digging of wells by kashtkars, and evidently was not intended to apply to the atadi. The other says that a kashtkar, or ryot, can build and pull down as he pleases within his own inclosure (andar ahate apne ke bana o bigar sakta hai). I doubt whether this was intended to authorize the construction of wells. It was probably intended to authorize a kashtkar or ryot, to make structural alterations inside his premises without reference to the zamindar.

But I am not prepared to hold that the sinking of a well within the premises was an act necessarily inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was granted. A well is one of the amenities or conveniences of an Indian house, and I consider that the grant of land for building purposes carries with it the right of making a well for the convenience of the occupiers. I would therefore restore the decree of the Munsif.

[296] BY THE COURT.—The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside and that of the court of first instance restored. The plaintiff will pay the costs of the defendants throughout.

[3rd March, 1913.]

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XXI, rule 88—Execution of decree—Sale in execution—Pre-emption—Title of pre-emptor defeasible.

Held that a title to a share in undivided immovable property sold in execution of a decree which is still defeasible at the date of the sale in execution is not sufficient to support a claim for pre emption under order XXI, rule 88, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Kamta Prasad v. Mohan Bhagat (1) and Nabian Bibi v. Kauleshar Rai (2) followed.

[Ref., 26 I. C. 95=12 A. L. J. 1148.]

THE facts of this case were briefly as follows:—A certain mahal was divided into two pattis, namely, (1) patti Fakir Bakhsh, in which the plaintiff was a co-sharer, and (2) patti Mumtaz-ud-din, in which the defendant was a co-sharer by virtue of shares purchased by him under two sale-deeds, dated the 11th of August, 1910. A share in the latter patti was put up, on the 20th of September, 1910, to sale by auction in execution of a decree. The plaintiff bid for the property, and the defendant, offering the same bid, claimed the right of pre-emption under order XXI, rule 88, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The sale was confirmed in the defendant's favour. Then the plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that the defendant had no right of pre-emption, and for possession of the property. Both the lower courts dismissed the suit, hence this second appeal. Shortly before the institution of this suit, but subsequent to the date of the auction sale, the plaintiff had brought two suits for pre-emption in respect of the shares purchased by the defendant in patti Mumtaz-ud-din on the 11th of August, 1910: both these suits were decreed and the decrees had become final.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (with him Pandit Braj Nath Vyas), for the appellant :—

[297] The question for determination is whether the plaintiff is a co-sharer within the meaning of order XXI, rule 88. That rule applies only when there are real bids between a co-sharer and an entire stranger. It does not deal with the question of preferential right between two co-sharers; Farzand Ali v. Alimullah (1). That case was decided under the corresponding section 14 of Act XXIII of 1861, and is an authority for the proposition that a share-holder in one patti of a pattidari estate is a co-sharer, within the meaning of that section, with reference to a share in another patti of the estate. The two pattis were formed by an imperfect partition, and the entity of the mahal was unaffected. The co-sharers of both the pattis were jointly liable for the revenue assessed on the whole mahal and there was thus a bond of union subsisting between them. The plaintiff is thus a member of the co-parcenary body and a co-sharer in the undivided immovable property, namely, the mahal. I am further supported by the case of Ram Autar v. Sheo Dutt (2). Secondly, the defendant cannot be entitled to pre-empt under order XXI, rule 88, unless he is a co-sharer. His title as a co-sharer rested on his purchases, dated the 11th of August, 1910. But both those sales were pre-empted by the plaintiff. Under such circumstances the defendant cannot be regarded as being a co-sharer at all, because he never acquired an absolute title; Kauleshar Rai v. Nabihan Bibi (3), Nabihan Bibi v. Kauleshar Rai (4), Kamta Prasad v. Mohan Bhagat (5).

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondents :—

The two pattis were absolutely separate, although for purposes of revenue the mahal remained the same, still for all other purposes it was broken up into two pattis. The mahal as a whole could not, after partition, be regarded as "undivided immovable property" within the meaning of order XXI, rule 88. The partition may have been an imperfect partition, but the fact remains that there was a division. As soon as a division, of whatever sort and to whatever extent, has taken place, the mahal ceases to be an undivided immovable property. In the present case it was patti Mumtaz-ud-din which was the undivided immovable property within the meaning of order XXI, rule 88, and the plaintiff, admittedly, was [298] not a co-sharer therein. I am supported by section 182 of the Land Revenue Act and by the cases of Digambur Misser v. Ram Lal Roy (6) and Ganga Singh v. Chedi Lal (7).

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, replied.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ. :—This was a suit by the appellant for possession of a share in patti Mumtaz-ud-din in mahal Fakir Bakhsh, mauza Mani Umarpur. This share was put up for sale on the 20th of September, 1910, in execution of a decree of a civil court. The plaintiff's bid was Rs. 530. The respondents offered the same amount and the share was knocked down to them under order XXI, rule 88, on their showing that they had purchased two other shares in the same patti on the 11th of August, 1910. The appellant was at the time the holder of a share in the other patti in the mahal, namely, patti Fakir Bakhsh, but held no share in patti Mumtaz-ud-din. His case is that he was at the time of the sale a co-sharer within the meaning of order XXI, rule 88, and that the respondents must be regarded as strangers, inasmuch as their title to the shares purchased by them on the 11th of August, 1910, was at the time defeasible and they have since been compelled to surrender those shares to the appellant under decrees for pre-emption obtained by him on the 8th of July 1911, and the 31st of January, 1912.

It appears that mahal Fakir Bakhsh was recently the subject of an imperfect partition at which the two pattis were constituted. It appears also that the whole of the land comprising the original mahal lies either in one patti or the other, there being no shamilat patti. In these circumstances it is a nice question whether the 'undivided property' for the purposes of order XXI, rule 88, is the whole mahal or only the patti Mumtaz-ud-din. But we need not decide this question, for, in accordance with the decisions of KNOX, A. C. J. and TUDBALL, J. in Kamta Prasad v. Mohan Bhagat (1) and of STANLEY C.J. and BURKITT, J. in Nabihan Bibi v. Kauleshar Rai (2) on appeal from the decision of RICHARDS, J. in 3 A. L. J. 426, we feel bound to hold that the defeasible title to the shares in patti Mumtaz-ud-din acquired by [299] the respondents in August, 1910, did not give them the right to pre-empt the share now in question as co-sharers.

We allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the courts below, and decree the appellant's claim to possession of the share in question with costs in all three courts.

Appeal allowed.

The son of a deceased occupancy tenant filed a suit against the zamindar in the civil court asking (1) to have it declared that he was the son and lawful heir of the late tenant and (2) for possession of the occupancy holding held by him. The plaintiff had been ejected more than two years before suit.

Held, that although so far as the first relief claimed was concerned the suit might be cognizable by a civil court, so far as the second relief was concerned the plaintiff's remedy was by suit under section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act, and, inasmuch as the time for filing such a suit had long since expired there was no object to be gained by granting the first relief. The entire suit was accordingly dismissed. Dori Lal v. Saraar Singh (3) referred to.

35 A. 299=11 A. L. J. 310 =18 I. C. 957.

IN this case the plaintiff sued as the son and heir of a deceased occupancy tenant praying for a declaration of his status as such and for possession of the occupancy holding which had been of his father. He had previously made an unsuccessful application for mutation of names in respect of the holding and had also brought a suit under section 95 of the Agra Tenancy Act 1901, which had been dismissed in appeal by the Commissioner two years before the filing of his present suit. The present suit was dismissed by the court of first instance upon the ground that it was not cognizable by a civil court. On appeal, however, this decision was set aside and the suit remanded. Against this order of remand the zamindar defendant appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Satya Narain, for the appellant.

Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji, for the respondent.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ. :—This appeal arises out of a suit, which was orginally brought by the plaintiff Sumera in [300] the Munsif's court, first, to have it declared that he was the son and lawful heir of one Jhau, deceased, and, as such, was entitled to the possession of a certain occupancy holding left by Jhau, and, secondly, for possession of the same as an occupancy tenant. The plaintiff claimed to be the legitimate son of Jhau and as such entitled to the holding. The zamindar resisted the claim. The plaintiff first of all applied to the revenue court for mutation of names in his favour. The zamindar objected, pleading that the plaintiff was not the legitimate son of Jhau. The application was disallowed. The plaintiff then brought a suit, under section 95 of the Tenancy Act, in the revenue court, asking for a declaration that he was the occupancy tenant of the holding. The suit was against the zamindar, who again raised the plea that the plaintiff was not the legitimate son of Jhau. The first court dismissed the suit and the court of the Commissioner upheld the decision on appeal in a very brief judgment, which runs as follows :—"The suit has been rightly dismissed. A suit under section 95 of the Tenancy Act is not the way in which to decide a question of legitimacy. The zamindar denies the existence of the tenancy and this is fatal to the suit. The appeal is dismissed with costs." This decision was passed on the 15th of November, 1909, apparently some two years or more after the death of Jhau. It is also clear that the Commissioner dismissed the suit on the ground that the tenancy was no longer in existence. Two years and six days after this decision the plaintiff comes to the civil court with this suit, in which he claims possession of the occupancy holding as against the landlord. The first court dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not cognizable by the civil court. This decision has been set aside in appeal and the suit remanded to the court of first instance by the Additional District Judge of Bareilly.

The defendant comes here on appeal, and urges that the suit is not cognizable by the Civil Court. The suit is very similar in its aspects to that of Dori Lal v. Sardar Singh (1), the only difference being that in that suit only a declaration was asked for that the plaintiff was the adopted son. It seems to us quite clear that on the death of Jhau, assuming that the plaintiff was [301] his legitimate son, he was entitled to the tenure and to continue the cultivation thereof, and if the zamindar unlawfully prevented him from going on to the holding, the plaintiff as occupancy tenant thereof was illegally dispossessed, and it was open to him to bring a suit under section 79 of the Tenancy Act for possession. In that suit it would have been open to the landlord to plead that he was not the occupancy tenant, and that he was not the legitimate son, and the matter could have been fought out in that suit. Section 95 of the Tenancy Act is hardly the section under which to proceed, and the suit brought under that section was rightly dismissed, as the plaintiff was not in possession. Even in the present suit it had to be admitted on behalf of the plaintiff that his suit for possession could not lie in the civil court, and it is said that all that he requires and asks for is a declaration that he is the legitimate son of Jhau. We are not prepared to say that if the plaintiff had come to the civil court for a simple declaration that he was the legitimate son of Jhau, he would not have been entitled to the declaration, provided that he proved his case; but the suit is actually one for possession of an occupancy tenure and is brought against the landlord. For two years after the dismissal of his suit by the Commissioner he did nothing. A suit for possession by a tenant illegally dispossessed has to be brought within six months of the dispossession. Such a suit, if it be now brought by the plaintiff, could not succeed. Therefore to grant a declaration that he is the legitimate son of Jhau would be of no use to him now. It could not be followed up by a suit for possession in the revenue court. In these circumstances, in our opinion, the suit must fail. In so far as it is a suit for possession of the holding, it is not cognizable by the civil court, and in so far as it is a suit for a declaration that he is the legitimate son of Jhau, and as such entitled to the occupancy holding, the Court cannot grant such a declaration as it would be of absolutely no value to the plaintiff. He has misconceived his remedy. He ought, in the first instance, to have sued for possession in the revenue court. We allow the appeal, and, setting aside the decision of the lower appellate court, restore the decree of the court of first instance with costs in all courts.

Appeal allowed.

Hindu law—Mitakshara—Joint Hindu family—Liability of sons in respect of a mortgage executed by father—Exemption of sons' interests—Subsequent suit against the sons—What plaintiffs are entitled to recover.

In 1892 a decree was passed on appeal for sale on a mortgage of joint family property against the father of the family. In 1896 the sons, who were not made parties to the original suit, obtained a decree exempting their shares in the family property. In 1897 the share of the father was sold and realized less than half the amount of the decree. In 1910 the mortgagees brought a suit against the sons to recover the balance of the mortgage debt after giving credit for the amount realized by sale in execution of the decree of 1892.

Held the suit was not barred, but that the plaintiffs could only recover the unsatisfied portion of the decree of 1892 together with future interest as allowed by that decree. They could not treat the suit as an ordinary mortgage suit, merely giving credit for the amount realized under the decree of 1892, nor could they claim interest at the contractual rate on the unpaid amount of the decree.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

THE facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of the Court.

The Hon'ble Munshi Gokul Prasad, for the appellants.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondents.

KNOX and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—It appears that one Payag Rai, father of the first five defendants appellants and grandfather of the other six, executed a deed of mortgage on the 27th of September, 1883, in favour of Anrut Rai plaintiff respondent No. 1, and the ancestors of the other plaintiffs respondents. The mortgage was given in respect of ancestral property in lieu of Rs. 999, carrying fourteen annas per cent. per mensem interest, and was redeemable on the 27th of June, 1885. In 1891 the mortgagees instituted a suit against Payag Rai only without impleading his sons, to recover, Rs. 1,567-7-4½, the amount due on foot of the mortgage of 1883 and for sale of the mortgaged property in default of payment. One of the objections to the suit was that [303] post diem interest at the stipulated rate of fourteen annas per cent. per mensem could not be claimed under the terms of the deed of the 27th of September 1883. The court of first instance disallowed the objection and passed a decree on the 3rd of July, 1891, against Payag Rai for Rs. 1,548-11-6. On appeal the learned District Judge gave effect to the objection of Payag Rai as to interest, holding that the mortgagees were entitled to recover post diem interest by way of damages only, which he allowed at six per cent. per annum. The decree of the first court was modified and the claim of the mortgagees was decreed for Rs. 1,321-7-6 on the 11th of June, 1892.

On the 18th of August, 1896, the first five defendants appellants, the sons of Payag Rai, instituted a suit against the mortgagees for a declaration that the decree obtained by the latter against Payag Rai was not binding on them, as they were not parties to it, and that their share in the mortgaged property was not liable to sale under it. The claim of Payag Rai's sons was decreed on the 11th of November, 1896. On the 20th of February, 1897, the share of Payag Rai only in the mortgaged property was sold in execution in the decree of the 11th of June, 1892. The sale realized Rs. 725.

On the 13th of February, 1910, eighteen years after the decree obtained against Payag Rai and thirteen years after the sale of his share, the plaintiffs respondents brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh against the sons and grandsons of Payag Rai to recover Rs. 2,093-2-6, the balance alleged to be due on the mortgage of 1883.

The suit of the plaintiffs respondents was in form an ordinary mortgage suit and they claimed Rs. 2,093-2-6 by making up the accounts from the date of the original mortgage as in an ordinary suit on a mortgage bond, crediting the amount realized by Payag Rai's share. In making up accounts, interest was charged at the stipulated rate of fourteen annas per cent. per mensem from the date of the mortgage till the date of the institution of the suit, thus ignoring the decree of 1892, under which interest after due date was allowed at six per cent. per annum only.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 302=
=11 A. L. J. 402.

The claim was resisted on several grounds, two of which need only be mentioned here as they alone have been pressed in the [304] appeal before us. It was urged in defence that as the decree of 1892 against Payag Rai had become barred and incapable of execution on the date of the institution of the present suit, the claim of the plaintiffs respondents was also barred. The principle on which accounts were made up in the plaint was also objected to. The Subordinate Judge disallowed the pleas in defence and decreed the claim for Rs. 2,093-2-6. On appeal the learned District Judge modified the decree of the first court. He held that the plaintiffs respondents should get the unsatisfied amount of the decree of 1892 together with interest at the contractual rate of fourteen annas per cent. per mensem from the 20th of February, 1897, up to date of decree.

The defendants appellants challenge the decree of the lower appellate court on the two grounds already mentioned. They contend that the original mortgage debt contracted by Payag Rai was merged in the decree of 1892. The mortgage of 1883 no more exists. The only outstanding debt against the ancestor of the appellants, for the payment of which they are liable under the Hindu law, is the unsatisfied amount of the decree. And as the decree has become barred and incapable of execution, the debt for the recovery of which the present suit is brought has also become barred and no claim in respect of it can be maintained.

The learned vakil for the appellants relies in support of his argument on the case of Lachhman Das v. Dallu (1). That case, in almost every respect, resembles the present case. In that case one Data Ram, father of a Mitakshara joint family, executed a mortgage in respect of ancestral property. The mortgagee sued Data Ram alone and obtained a decree against him. In execution of the decree-mortgaged property was sold for the amount of the decree and purchased by the mortgagee. Subsequently the sons of Data Ram sued the mortgagee and obtained a decree for recovery of possession of their share in the mortgaged property on the ground that they were not parties to the suit in which the decree for sale had been passed against their father. Then the mortgagee brought a suit against the sons, framing his suit as an ordinary mortgage suit and making up accounts from the date of the mortgage and giving credit for the money realized at the sale. [305] The sons resisted the claim. They denied their liability for the mortgage debt as also the power of their father to charge their share in the ancestral property. They further disputed the manner in which the accounts had been made up in the plaint. They said, that if they were made liable for the mortgage-debt, they should pay only one-fourth of the money paid at the sale of the mortgaged property, as their share which was released from the operation of the decree against their father was one-fourth only. In disposing of his last objection HENDERSON, J., remarked as follows:—

"I have already drawn attention to the finding that previous to the suit by the respondents (i.e. the sons) the mortgaged decree had been fully satisfied, and it is only because the plaintiff (i e. the mortgagee) has since been deprived of a one fourth share of the mortgaged property which he himself purchased for Rs. 1,100, that he is now able to say that any portion of the debt has not been discharged. In my opinion that original mortgage no longer exists, and if there it still outstanding a portion of the debt due upon the decree against Data Ram, then the respondents as sons of Data Ram, are liable to that extent for the debt of their father, as they do not allege that the debt was one from which they could claim to be relieved . . . It would not be unfair to deduct one-fourth from Rs. 1,100, which was paid for the whole property and take the balance Rs. 825 as the amount for which credit should have been given, leaving Rs. 275 still outstanding as a debt for which the respondents are still liable . . . The sum of Rs. 275 became an outstanding debt as from the date of the respondents' decree declaring them entitled to possession of their one-fourth share, and it will carry such interest, if any, as was allowed on the principal amount of the mortgage decree. For this amount the respondents are undoubtedly liable to the plaintiff."

It is on the basis of these observations that the learned vakil for the appellants contends that the mortgage of 1883 merged in the decree of 1892; and as the mortgage of 1883 no more exists and the decree debt due from Pavag Rai has become barred, the claim of the plaintiffs respondents is also barred. We do not think, that the contention of the appellants is sound. The plaintiffs respondents have not framed their suit on the basis of the decree of 1892. They do not seek to charge the appellants' share in the ancestral property on the strength of that decree. And indeed they could not do so in the face of the decree of 1896 in favour of the appellants declaring that the latter were not bound and that their interest in the ancestral property was not affected by the decree obtained against their father. If, according to the appellants, the mortgage [306] of 1883 has merged in the decree of 1892, then the unsatisfied portion of that decree can be recovered only as a simple money debt. If the contention of the appellants is correct, the present suit is not maintainable, that is, the plaintiffs respondents cannot enforce payment of the debt charged on the ancestral property by Pavag Rai against the interests of his sons in that property, though the debt was not tainted with immorality or otherwise objectionable.

The plea of limitation urged on behalf of the appellants can only be given effect to if we hold that the suit of the plaintiffs respondents in its present form is not maintainable. That such a suit is maintainable is amply borne out by the case-law on the subject, vide Dharam Singh v. Angan Lal (1) and Ram Singh v. Sobha Ram (2). We, therefore, find that the claim of the plaintiffs respondents is not barred by limitation. The observations of HENDERSON, J. quoted above, upon which great stress is laid by the learned vakil for the appellants, do not apply to the nature of the remedy open to a mortgagee against the Hindu sons, but to the amount recoverable by him after he has obtained a decree against the father only and a portion of that decree remains unpaid. Those observations do, however, certainly support the second contention for the appellants, namely, that the plaintiffs respondents cannot recover more than the unsatisfied portion of the decree of 1892 with future interest allowed on that decree. The plaintiffs respondents cannot make up accounts as in an ordinary mortgage suit, and, giving credit for the money realized at the sale of Payag Rai's share, claim the balance. Nor can they claim to recover interest at the contractual rate on the unpaid amount of the decree, as has been allowed to them by the learned District Judge. We allow the second contention of the appellants. The result is that we modify the decree of the lower appellate court by decreeing the claim of the plaintiffs respondents for Rs. 529-3-0 with interest at six per cent. per annum from the 20th of February, 1897, up to the date of the decree of this Court, that is, Rs. 1,038-5-0. The appellants will pay the sum of the Rs. 1,038-5-0 within six months of the decree of this Court with future interest at six per cent, per annum. In default of payment within six Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 60 (c)—Execution of decree—Attachment—Objection that attached property is the house of an agriculturist—Judgment-debtor both zamindar and agriculturist—Burden of proof.

Where a judgment-debtor whose house was attached in execution of a decree took objection that the house was the house of an agriculturist to which section 60 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure applied and was not susceptible of attachment, and it was found that the judgment-debtor was both an agriculturist and a zamindar:

Held that it lay on the judgment-debtor to prove that the house was strictly of the nature contemplated by the provisions of section 60 (c).

IN this case in execution of a simple money decree against one Jamna Prasad Raut a house belonging to him in a certain village was attached. The judgment-debtor took objection that the house was the house of an agriculturist within the meaning of section 60 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure and could not be attached. This objection was overruled on the finding that the house was not in fact occupied by the judgment-debtor (who was both a zamindar and an agriculturist) as an agriculturist. The judgment-detor appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Munshi Haribans Sahai, for the appellant.

Munshi Mangal Prasad Bhargava (with him Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri), for the respondent.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ JJ:—The appellant is a judgment-debtor whose house in a certain village has been attached in the execution of a simple money decree. Two portions of the same house have already been attached and sold, and the remainder, which is described as a six anna share, has now been attached. The judgment-debtor came forward and objected that he was an agriculturist and therefore his house was exempt from attachment [308] and sale. The court below has decided that the house is not occupied by him as an agriculturist and is therefore not exempt from sale. He has come here on appeal. The question is whether or not he has produced evidence to show that he is an agriculturist and occupied the house as such. The appellant was formerly the zamindar of the village, but his interest as such has been sold and he now holds his sir land as an exproprietary holding. He lives in another village and holds zamindari in several villages. He has produced two witnesses who state that his cattle and implements are kept in the house in dispute. The appellant being both a zamindar and a cultivator of land, the question arises as to what is his main source of income and whether or not he is an agriculturist within the strict sense of the term and occupies the house as such. The burden of proof lay on him, and it was for him to show to the court that his main source of income was cultivation and not zamindari and that he was in the strict sense of the term an agriculturist. He produced two witnesses, and in our opinion their evidence is not sufficient to prove that his main source of income is agriculture and that he is an agriculturist within the strict sense of the term. As a matter of fact in the past he held considerable zamindari, though he has lost some of it by reason of decrees obtained against him. In this case it has not been satisfactorily proved that he is an agriculturist within the strict meaning of the term. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Held that an order of the Government directing that a particular municipal election held in the year 1911 should be conducted according to certain rules passed in 1884, and not according to the rules passed in pari materia in 1910, which superseded those of 1884, was ultra vires, and that, inasmuch as the [309] rules of 1884 did not apply and the election was not held under the rules of 1910, a suit would lie in a civil court to contest the election, irrespective of anything contained in either set of rules, the period of limitation applicable to which was that prescribed by article 120 of the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Gur Charan Das v. Har Sarup (1) referred to.

[Ref. 35 All. 450.]

In this case the appellant and the respondent were rival candidates for a seat on the municipal board of Bareilly at an election held on the 18th of March, 1911. The respondent, having been declared duly elected, the appellant, on the 24th of March, preferred a petition to the District Magistrate. On the 10th of May, that petition was rejected, and on the following day the appellant filed his present suit in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly claiming a declaration that he had been elected by a majority of the lawful votes given, and in the alternative a declaration that the election was void as having been held under rules which had been already cancelled. The suit was dismissed in appeal by the District Judge of Bareilly, on the ground that the election had been held under certain rules framed by Government in 1884, one of which barred the jurisdiction of the civil court, and that the appellant was not empowered to maintain the suit either under the rules for municipal elections framed in 1910 or under the Specific Relief Act. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, for the respondent.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER JJ.—The appellant and the respondent were rival candidates for a seat on the municipal board of Bareilly at an election held on the 18th of March, 1911. The respondent having been declared to have been duly elected, the appellant on the 24th of March, contested the validity of the election by a petition presented to the District Magistrate. On the 10th of May that petition was rejected, and on the following day the appellant brought this suit in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly claiming a declaration that he had been elected by a majority of the lawful votes given and, in the alternative, a declaration that the election was void having been held under rules which had been cancelled. This Court has already held that the suit is cognizable by a civil court, but the suit has been dismissed by an appellate order of the [310] District Judge on the ground that the election was held under rules made in 1884, one of which barred jurisdiction of the civil court, and the appellant was not entitled to maintain this suit under some new rules made in July, 1910, or under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The suit is obviously one of a civil nature, and it is unnecessary to cite authority for the proposition that it is maintainable in a civil court, unless it is barred by some Act of the Legislature or by some rule having the force of law.

Rules regarding elections of this kind in Bareilly were made in 1884 under section 10 of Act XV of 1883. Rule No. 45 provided that the validity of an election might be questioned by petition to the District Magistrate presented within fifteen days of the election. Those rules were superseded by rules made in July, 1910, under section 187 of the Municipalities Act, 1900, one of which expressly recognized the right of recourse to a 'competent court' to challenge the election. This Court has held [see Gur Charan Das v. Har Sarup (1)] that the competent court is the civil court. It is quite clear that the election now in question ought to have been held under the rules of July, 1910. The Local Government seems to have directed that this election should be held under the rules of 1884. That order does not appear to be a rule made under the Act, but appears to be merely an executive instruction to the Magistrate. The only rules of which we can take notice are the rules made under the Act. We must, therefore, hold that the election was contrary to law.

We have grave doubts whether the Government was competent to bar the jurisdiction of the civil court by means of a rule made under section 10 of the Act of 1883. The respondent relies upon clause (g) of section 9 read with section 10 of the Act, but that clause refers only to 'the system of representation and of election'. It is, however, unnecessary to decide this question, for the rules made under the Act of 1883 had ceased to have any effect before the election now in question was held. It is admitted that the election was not held under the rules of July, 1910, and cannot be justified by those rules. For the above reasons we hold that at the date of the election there was no provision having the force of law which barred the maintenance of [311] the present suit. The suit was, therefore, maintainable. On the merits the appellant is entitled to a declaration that the election of the respondent was void having been held contrary to law.

The only other question is whether the suit was brought within time. The period of limitation prescribed by the rules of 1884 may be disregarded, both because it applies only to a petition to be] presented to the District Magistrate and because those rules had ceased to have any effect when the election was held. If the rules of 1884 are disregarded, the limitation applicable to the present suit is that prescribed by article 120 of schedule 1 to the Limitation Act, 1908, and the suit was brought within time. We express no opinion upon the question of the validity of the rule made under section 187 of the Municipalities Act, 1900, which prescribes a period of limitation for a suit to contest an election held under the rules of July, 1910.

Hindu law—Hindu widow—Powers of alienation possessed by a Hindu widow in respect of property of her husband—Transfer of debt secured by a mortgage.

A Hindu widow in possession as such of property which had been the property of her husband in his life-time can always alienate her life interest in such property and a transfer by her of the corpus of the property without legal necessity and not for a pious purpose is not void but only voidable at the instance of the reversioners.

A Hindu widow, without legal necessity transferred a mortgage debt and the security therefor, which had been the property of her late husband, to D, who thereafter sued to recover the debt by sale of the mortgaged property. Held that the transferee acquired all the rights which the widow had and could exercise during her life-time in respect of the mortgage, one of these being to recover the debt. Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Muhishi Debi (1) referred to.

THIS was a suit for sale on a mortgage, dated the 12th of June, 1879, made by Tara Singh and Bahadur Singh in favour of [312] one Murli Dhar. The mortgagee died shortly after, leaving a son, Rup Ram, who died leaving Musammat Parbati, his mother, and Musammat Ganga Kunwar, his widow, surviving him. The two widows transferred the mortgagee right under the mortgage of the 12th of June, 1879, to Musammat Durga Kunwar, the plaintiff appellant in the present case. The plaintiff brought this suit for sale on foot of that mortgage. The defendants 1—6 were prior mortgagees of the same property under a mortgage of 1872, and they had purchased the property in 1890 in execution of a decree on their mortgage, to which decree neither the plaintiff nor her tranferors or their predecessors in interest were parties. The defendants, 2nd party, were the mortgagors and their representatives, and the defendants, 3rd party, were the two ladies Ganga Kunwar and Parbati, the transferors. The plaintiff offered to redeem the prior mortgages, but in the alternative prayed that the property might be sold subject to those mortgages. The defendants, 3rd party, admitted the claim of the plaintiff, and defendants, 2nd party, did not appear. The defendants, 1st party, contested the claim on these grounds:—(1) The transferors being widows of members of a joint Hindu family, including others than their husbands, could not transfer the debt and the plaintiff did not get the widow's estate in the mortgage. (2) The sale to the plaintiff was without legal necessity and therefore void, and as a corollary from this, (3) that it was for the purpose of defeating the rights of the reversioners. The widows of Murli Dhar and Rup Ram were alive at the date of suit. The reversioners were no parties to the suit, but another suit was brought by them alleging themselves to be bandhus of Rup Ram and asking for a declaration that the transfer by Ganga Kunwar to plaintiff was void against them. The plaintiff defended that suit on the ground that the widows were competent to transfer. The Subordinate Judge found that the family was not joint, and that Ganga Kunwar had a widow's estate in the property left by her husband, including the mortgage, but that there was no legal necessity for the transfer. He dismissed the suit of the plaintiff, Durga Kunwar, and decreed that of the reversioners against her on these findings and gave them a decree that the plaintiff had acquired no rights whatever against them.

[313] On appeal to the High Court the case came up before RICHARDS, C.J. and BANERJI, J., who delivered the following judgments:—

RICHARDS, C.J.—This suit was brought to recover a sum of Rs. 70,000, principal and interest due under a mortgage, dated the 12th of June, 1879. The mortgage was made in favour of Murli Dhar by Tara Singh and Bahadur Singh. The principal was Rs. 4,000. The rate of interest was Re. 1-5-0 per mensem, compound interest. The bond in suit is alleged to have been sold to the plaintiff on the 21st of May, 1909, in consideration of the sum of Rs. 7,500 by Musammat Parbati and Musammat Ganga Kunwar. Musammat Parbati was the wife of Murli Dhar, and Musammat Ganga Kunwar was the wife of Rup Ram, the son of Murli Dhar. Both the father and the son were dead prior to the execution of the sale-deed. It appears from the plaint itself that the property which it is now sought to bring to sale had already been sold under a mortgage decree on foot of a prior mortgage dated the 19th of February, 1872. The decree had been obtained as far back as the year 1890. The decree-holders had purchased the property themselves, and they have been in actual possession since some time between the years 1892 and 1895. The respondents are the representatives of these prior mortgagees. The plaintiff claims that when the suit was brought on foot of the prior mortgage neither Murli Dhar nor Rup Ram were made defendants, and that accordingly she, as assignee of the bond of the 12th of June, 1879, is now entitled to bring the property to sale on terms of paying to the respondents the amount, if any, due upon the mortgage of the 19th of February, 1872. She claims that over a lakh is due on foot of the mortgage of the 12th of June, 1879, but she relinquishes the sum of Rs. 76,938-14-0 and sues to realize the balance, that is to say, the sum of Rs. 70,000.

The suit out of which the connected First Appeal No. 174 of 1910 arises was tried in the lower court at one and the same time. It was a suit in which the plaintiffs in the suit claimed as reversioners a declaration that the sale deed of the 21st of May, 1909, was void as against them. A number of issues were tried in this last mentioned suit. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the bond in suit became vested in Rup Ram after the death of Murli Dhar, and that the plaintiffs Sri Gopal, Hoti Lal and Piari [314] Lal where the reversioners. He found further that the sale of the 21st of May, 1909, was made without legal necessity and with a view to deprive the reversioners of their right. The court accordingly gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs 2 to 4 declaring that the sale was void and ineffectual against them.

The learned Subordinate Judge also dismissed the plaintiff's claim in the present suit holding that, inasmuch as the bond was sold without legal necessity and for the purpose of defeating the rights of the reversioners, the plaintiff did not acquire by virtue of the sale any title to maintain the suit.

The plaintiff, Musammat Durga Kunwar, has appealed against the decree dismissing her suit and also against the decree in the connected appeal declaring that the sale was void against the reversioners.

It is difficult to understand why the owners of the bond in suit slept on their rights so long. There can, I think, be no doubt whatever that the purchase of the bond by the plaintiff was a speculative purchase. It is impossible to know exactly how much of the consideration for the sale actually passed, or what was the arrangement between the vendors and the vendee. I think, however, that we are bound to assume that the plaintiff became the assignee of the bond with such rights and title as Musammat Parbati and Musammat Ganga Kunwar could under the circumstances give her. She is entitled to get a decree if she can make good her claim. Bearing in mind the facts of the case and the date of the institution of the connected suit, I think there can be little doubt that the defendants in the present suit put forward the reversioners of Rup Ram to challenge the sale to Musammat Durga Kunwar, and that in all probability there was some arrangement between them. We can, however, hardly blame the defendants for using any weapon they can to retain the property, in the absolute possession of which they have so long been. It has not been attempted to show that the finding of the court below that the sale by Musammat Parbati and Musammat Ganga Kunwar was made without legal necessity is wrong. In fact the argument did not challenge the decision in the connected appeal, save to contend that the decree actually passed went a little too far, in that it declared that Musammat Durga Kunwar acquired no [315] right to the aforesaid bond. It was urged that she had acquired some title. She had acquired title as against her vendors. This, it seems to me under the circumstances of the present case, is purely a matter of form.

The argument put forward on behalf of the plaintiff appellant is as follows:—The widow represented the estate. She undoubtedly might have sued upon the bond and recovered the amount due thereon without being liable to account to any one. Therefore the plaintiff as her assignee has the same right that she had and she can sue upon the bond. Furthermore the sale by a Hindu widow is voidable, not void, and that therefore it cannot be questioned by the defendants in this suit. These where the points argued. It seems to me that it by no means follows that because a Hindu widow can sue on foot of a bond and give a good discharge to the mortgagor that her assignee has the same right. A Hindu widow can sue upon a bond and collect the debts due to the estate because she is an heir and represents the estate, in other words, by virtue of the fact that she is a Hindu widow and in possession as such. Nothing I think can be more clearly established than the proposition that a Hindu widow cannot alienate the property except for certain special purposes or legal necessity: See The Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Venkata Narrainapah (1).

It has no doubt been held that the reversioners cannot question the sale during the life of the widow save to the extent of getting a declaration that the sale is not to be binding on them, and it is argued that the sale is voidable only and not void; and the case Bejoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (2) is relied upon. That was a case in which the reversioners sued to recover possession of certain property in respect of which a Hindu widow could alienate subject to certain conditions being complied with, and that therefore the alienation was not absolutely void but was voidable at the election of the reversionary heir, who might, if he thought fit, affirm it or treat it as a nullity. The Court was there dealing with the partial alienation made by the widow, i.e., a lease which her successors might or might not adopt if they found it was made without authority. It seems to me, however, that the question whether or not an alienation by a [316] Hindu widow is void or voidable is immaterial in the present appeal. It has not been suggested that there is any distinction as to the class of property which a Hindu widow is restrained from alienating. She has no more right to assign that part of the estate which consists of mortgagee rights than she has to assign the immovable property strictly so called. In either case she or her assignee must show that circumstances existed which made the alienation a valid alienation.

In the present case the sale by the widow has been successfully challenged unless we set aside the decree in the connected case. It is said, however, that this is a question beteen the reversioners on the one side and the widow on the other, and that third parties are not entitled to raise the question of the validity or invalidity of the sale. I do not think that this proposition is sound. Suppose that a Hindu widow alienated mortgagee rights in a case in which it had to be admitted that she was not justified in making the alienation according to the Hindu Law. Suppose that her assignee sued on the bond and recovered the full amount, from the mortgagor. Suppose futher that afterwards the reversioners obtained a declaration that the sale was void as against them. Would not the mortgagor in such a case in a suit by the reversioners after the death of the widow be obliged to pay the mortgage debt a second time, save perhaps to the extent of the interest which had accrued during the life-time of the widow? Could not the reversioners say :—" The widow is now dead and as against us the sale is a complete nullity? " It seems to me that it could be argued with irresistible force that the assignee of the widow could not give a good discharge for the mortgage debt until after it was established that the sale was a sale which a Hindu widow was entitled to make for legal necessity or for a pious purpose. It seems to me that where it is or may be necessary for the protection of a third party to question the validity of an alienation by a Hindu widow, such third party is undoubtedly entitled to do so. See Hazari v. Lallu (3).

I do not think that an unauthorized sale by a Hindu widow can clothe her assignee with the Hindu widow's right to represent the estate and collect the debts. It is possible that under certain [317] circumstances it might be shown that the widow was driven to sell the mortgagee rights, as, for example, if she had no means to institute a suit to recover the amount. In such a case, however, I think the transaction would be justified on the ground of necessity or perhaps on the ground that under the special circumstances of the case it was the only possible way of realizing the debt due to the estate. In such a case I think the Court to be consistent, should hold that the whole estate had passed to the transferee and that the reversioners were absolutely bound by the transfer made by the widow. I would dismiss the appeal.

BANERJI, J.—The question in this appeal which arises out of a suit for sale upon a mortgage, is whether an assignee of the mortgage from a Hindu widow, on whom the mortgagee rights devolved by right of inheritance, is entitled to maintain the suit, if the assignment was not made for legal necessity. The facts are these:—Tara Singh and Bahadur Singh executed the mortgage in question in 1879 in favour of Murli Dhar. Upon the death of Murli Dhar the mortgage devolved on his son Rup Ram, whose widow Musammat Ganga, jointly with Mussammat Parbati, the widow of Murli Dhar, transferred the mortgage to the plaintiff on the 21st of May, 1909. As Musammat Parbati had no right to the mortgage, the transfer by her is of no consequence and the transfer must be deemed to be a transfer by Musammat Ganga, who alone was entitled to the mortgagee rights. It has been found by the court below that the transfer was without legal necessity, and this finding has not been challenged before us. It is by virtue of this transfer that the plaintiff is seeking to enforce the mortgage.

The defendants to the suit are the representatives of the mortgagors and certain purchasers of the mortgaged property in execution of a decree upon an earlier mortgage of 1872. The suit was contested by these transferees alone and they contended that the plaintiff had no right to sue. Murli Dhar, the person in whose favour the mortgage in suit was executed, was not made a party to the suit under the earlier mortgage and therefore he or his representative in interest has still the right as subsequent mortgagee to redeem that mortgage and then to sell under the mortgage in his favour. This is what the plaintiff seeks to do in this case.

[318] The court below has dismissed the suit, apparently under the impression that the transfer of the mortgage of 1876 made by Musammat Ganga being without legal necessity is absolutely void and that therefore the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain the suit. This view is clearly erroneous. An alienation by a Hindu widow without justifying necessity is not absolutely void, but it is voidable only. In any case it will hold good during the life-time of the widow. This has been so repeatedly held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that it is unnecessary to cite authorities. I may however refer to the recent case of Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (1).

The mortgage which is sought to be enforced in this suit secures a principal sum of Rs. 4,000. The plaintiff has purchased it for Rs. 7,500. It has been found in the connected suit brought by the reversioners that she paid full consideration and that the sale is a real transaction. On this point there is no controversy in this appeal. The amount claimed by the plaintiff is Rs. 70,000. Apparently she is a speculator, but, that circumstance should not induce us to overlook the real question involved in the case. If she has a legal right to maintain the suit that right must be enforced. The decision of the case, in my opinion, depends on the nature of the estate held by a Hindu widow and her powers of alienation in respect of it.

The nature of a Hindu widow's estate was thus stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (1):—"According to the Hindu law a widow who succeeds to the estate of her husband in default of male issue . . . does not take a mere life estate in the property. The whole estate is for the time vested in her absolutely for some purposes, though in some respects for only a qualified interest. Her estate is 'an anomalous one". Mr. Mayne describes it in the following terms:—" Her (the widow's) absolute right to the fullest benefit of her life interest appears long to have been recognized . . . A woman is in no sense a trustee for those who may come after her. She is not bound to save the income. She is not bound to invest the principal. If she chooses to invest it, she is not bound to prefer one form of investment to another form as being more likely to [319] protect the interests of the reversioner. She is forbidden to commit waste or endanger the property in her possession, but short of that, she may spend the income and manage the principal as she thinks proper" (7th Edition, p. 840). She has no power absolutely to alienate the estate or a part of it, whether movable or immovable, except for certain purposes, but if she alienates it the transfer is, in every case, valid during her life-time and will have full effect and operation till her death. The only distinction between an alienation for a legal necessity and any other alienation is that the former endures after her death and is binding on the reversioners, whereas in the case of the latter it has full force and effect till her death, but may be avoided by the reversionary heirs of her husband after her death. From the operation of the above rule no class of property is exempt and it applies as much to mortgagee rights as to any other rights. Therefore when a Hindu widow sells the mortgagee rights which she inherited from her husband, but the sale is without legal necessity, the transferee, in my opinion, acquires all the rights which the widow had and could exercise during her life-time in respect of the mortgage. Such a transfer is not absolutely void, and I do not know of any authority which declares it to be so. There can be no doubt that the widow herself could bring a suit to enforce the mortgage. It is equally clear that she could give a full discharge to the mortgagor. If she received the mortgage money from the mortgagor and gave him a discharge, it would not lie in the reversioner to claim that money over again from the mortgagor. Her powers are not, as pointed out by Mr. Mayne, less than those of the manager of a family property. That a manager can give a complete discharge to the mortgagor is beyond controversy and doubt. Therefore, a Hindu widow also may do so. If she transfers her rights under the mortgage the transferee is, in my opinion, entitled to give a discharge to the mortgagor. If the mortgagor has obtained a discharge from the transferee he would not, any more than in the case of a discharge by the widow, be liable to the reversioner for the mortgage debt. The only right of the reversioner will be, as it seems to me, to prevent the widow, in the case of the widow, from wasting the corpus of the mortgagee-estate, i.e., the amount of the mortgage debt inherited by her, [320] and in the case of the transferee, to claim the amount of the mortgage due at the date of the death of the last male owner of the mortgagee rights. This point, however, I am not called upon to decide in this case, as the reversioners are not parties to it and the contingency to which I have referred has not yet arisen. But I fail to see that there is any bar to the right of the transferee from the widow to enforce the mortgage. As the widow was entitled to do so, her transferee is, in my opinion, equally entitled. The transferees of the mortgaged property are in this respect in no better position than the mortgagor. Any other view is likely to cause hardship and in some cases would result in injury to the rights of the reversioners. Suppose the widow has not the means to defray the costs of bringing a suit to enforce the mortgage. If she cannot transfer it so as to give the transferee a right to sue upon the mortgage a claim for sale may become time-barred and the mortgagee rights may become extinct. This will be to the prejudice of the reversioners. Again, if the widow has made an assignment of the mortgage she has no longer any right to sue on it. And if we hold that the transferee cannot sue, no suit can be brought upon the mortgage. The reversioner has no right to bring such a suit in the widow's life-time. The result will be that no one would be able to enforce the mortgage, and if the widow lives for more than twelve years after the mortgage has become due the mortgage will become incapable of enforcement. For these reasons I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the suit, and I am unable to agree with the decision of the court below on this point.

The plaintiff is, of course, not entitled to sell the mortgaged property unless she redeems the prior mortgage under which the defendants, first party, purchased it, or she may do so subject to the prior mortgage. There are other questions involved in the suit which the court below has not decided. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and remand the case to that court for trial on the merits.

The decree of the Court accordingly followed the judgment of the Chief Justice and from that judgment the plaintiff appealed under section 10 of the Letters Patent.

[321] The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru (Munshi Gulzari Lal with him), for the appellant:—

A Hindu widow could give a valid discharge to the creditors of her husband. The appellant stood in the shoes of the widow and could represent her. In dismissing her claim the court was protecting not the reversioner, but the debtors, because any future suit on the mortgage would be time-barred now. No question of legal necessity arose in the case, because for her life a widow could transfer all her rights. Whatever may be the nature of the property the rights of the widows were the same. The rights of reversioners could only arise when the mortgage money came into the hands of the widows or their transferees. There was no question about it yet. The plaintiff might never redeem, or the sum payable to the prior mortgagees may work out to a figure which the plaintiff might not be able to pay. Again, the reversioners were only entitled to the sum due on the mortgage on the death of Rup Ram. Whatever interest has accrued since then it is the property of the widow and through her of her transferee. A reversioner had no vested interests and was not entitled to a personal decree. The widow was not a trustee for the reversioners, nor has a case of waste been made out; Hurrydoss Dutt v. Sreemutty Uppoornath Dossee (1) Golapchander Shastri's Hindu Law, p. 426, summed up the law as to the estate enjoyed by a Hindu widow; Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (1) Modhu Sudan Singh v. Rooke (2).

Munshi Govind Prasad (Nawab Muhammad Abdul Majid with him), of the respondents:—

There was no dispute so far as the rights of a Hindu widow were concerned, but certain restrictions had been placed on those rights. She could sue on a mortgage and the reversioners could restrain her from waste, but here she had transferred her rights without any necessity. The question would be as to the position of the assignee. If the plaintiff got a decree and the property was sold, either the decree-holder or a third party would purchase the property. Before the sale the prior mortgage would have to be redeemed. If the purchase was made by a third party, the question [322] would remain—could the reversioners proceed against the purchaser? The widow could not transfer the corpus. Again what exactly would be the corpus? Interest had gone on accumulating and was an accretion to the estate; Mayne, p. 628, 6th edition. Could a person holding under an assignment from another with a limited interest bring a suit upon the mortgage? It would mean a transfer of the corpus. The sale would not bind the reversioners.

The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru was not heard in reply.

KNOX, TUDBALL and CHAMIER JJ.:—The facts of this case as found by the court below and which are not now contested before us are briefly as follows:—

Rup Ram, a separated Hindu, died leaving a widow, Musammat Ganga Kunwar, and a mother, Musammat Parbati. One part of his estate was a debt secured by a simple mortgage over certain property. The widow and mother without legal necessity transferred this by deed of sale in favour of the present plaintiff appellant, who has brought this suit for sale impleading as defendants,

(1) the mortgagors or their representatives,

(2) the transferors of the bond, and

(3) certain prior mortgagees who had sued upon their bond without impleading the puisne mortgagee and having obtained a decree for sale had in execution thereof purchased the property and obtained possession.

The mortgagors did not defend the suit. The vendors admitted the claim. The prior mortgagees contested it, and the one defence with which we are concerned in this appeal was that the plaintiff had no right to sue, as the sale was without legal necessity and the widow could not transfer her right to sue.

During the pendency of this suit certain reversioners brought another suit against the two ladies and their vendee asking for a declaration that the sale in favour of the latter was null and void as against them, and that under it the vendee acquired no right to the bond. They claimed that their maternal grand-father Puran Mal and Rup Ram had been joint, and that on the death of the latter Puran Mal became the sole owner of the joint family property, and on his death their mother, whom they also impleaded, became entitled to a life interest.

[323] The two suits were heard together, and the court held that Rup Ram was separate from Puran Mal and was the last male owner, but that the plaintiffs in the second suit were the next reversioners as being bandhus; that the transfer was without legal necessity, and that the transferee acquired no right under the sale-deed. It accordingly decreed the suit of the reversioners in toto and dismissed that of the transferee Musammat Durga.

The latter appealed in both suits, and the appeals coming before a Bench of this Court, the Judges who constituted that Bench, differed on the question of law which arises for decision in the case. The learned Chief Justice agreed with the court below. Mr. Justice Banerji held that the widow at least transferred to the appellant her interest as a Hindu widow, and she being still alive the transferee was entitled to sue and recover the debt, and that the reversioners were only entitled to a declaration in their suit that the transfer, as against them, was null and void.

The present appeal has been preferred under the Letters Patent.

In our view the decision of Mr. Justice Banerji is correct.

In the circumstances the suit of the reversioners is, from the point of view of their interests, suicidal. If the assignee cannot sue to recover the debt, the bar of limitation will prevent both the widow and the reversioners, who succeed her, from recovering the money. Their suit has, therefore, been brought really in the interests of the prior mortgagees.

It is not denied that the estate of a Hindu widow is more than a mere life interest. She is an owner whose powers of alienation are restricted. See Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (1). In certain circumstances she can represent the estate and her acts will bind the reversioners.

She is entitled to enjoy and spend the whole income of the estate, though she can be restrained from wasting and destroying the corpus, and there is nothing in law to prevent her from transferring her so-called life interest. A transfer by her of the corpus of the estate without legal necessity and not for a pious purpose, is not void, but is voidable by the reversioners and may be so declared at their instance. It cannot be denied that if she [324] transferred immoveable property in this manner her transferee would be entitled to hold and possess it during her life-time and to recover possession of it by suit as against a third party who was wrongfully in possesion; i.e., if the mortgage in the present instance had been usufructuary, her transferee would clearly have been entitled to sue for possession, provided there was no bar of limitation.

In the present case the widow is entitled to spend all income accruing on the debt after the death of Rup Ram and her transferee is "at least" entitled to recover this amount and to appropriate it to her own use. It is impossible to hold, therefore, that the latter has no power to sue. It may be that if the reversioners intervened in the suit of the assignee, the court might pass such a decree as would protect their interests and the corpus of the estate, but in the present case, though they are fully aware of the suit, they have not intervened to protect their own interests; on the contrary, they have preferred the suicidal course of attempting to destroy the corpus by preventing the recovery of the debt.

We agree with BANERJI, J., that the transferee acquired all the rights which the widow had, and could exercise, during her life-time in respect of the mortgage, one of those being the right to recover the debt. It is plead ed that if the mortgagors pay the debt they will be open to another suit by the reversioners on the death of the widow and may have to pay a se°ond time. The widow is a party to the suit and the estate is duly represented, and we do not think that there is any force in the argument.

It is urged that the sale for Rs. 7,500 in the present case of a debt amounting to over one lakh is, on the face of it, a wasting of the corpus by the widow. We can express no opinion on this at this stage, nor are we called upon to do so. The value of the property mortgaged and the amount of the prior burden are two other material factors which would have to be considered in this connection. But the point does not arise for our decision.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the decrees both of this Court and of the Additional Subordinate Judge, and remand the suit to the latter court for decision on the merits. The appellant will have her costs in this Court in any event.

Contract—Sale—Goods sent to purchaser not in accordance with terms of contract—Purchaser not bound to return goods to vendor.

When goods sent to a purchaser, professedly in execution of a contract of sale are not of the kind which the vendor had agreed to supply, it is not the duty of the purchaser to see that such goods are returned to the vendor; it is enough if he gives notice to the vendor that the goods are lying at the place to which they were sent at the vendor's risk. Grimoldby v. Wells (1) followed.

IN this case the plaintiff agreed to supply the defendant with stone for building purposes to be delivered at Karnal in the Punjab. The stone was sent to Karnal, but on examination it was found to be wholly unsuitable to the purposes for which it had been supplied. The defendant then brought a suit against the plaintiff in the Punjab and obtained a decree for a refund of the price of the stone and for damages. The plaintiff subsequently sued the defendant for the return of the stone. The court of first instance dismissed the suit, but this decree was reversed on appeal and a decree given in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant thereupon appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondent.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ.—The plaintiff in this case, who is respondent here, agreed to supply the defendant with stone for building purposes. The stone was delivered at Karnal, but on examination it was found to be wholly unsuitable to the purposes for which it was supplied. The defendant then brought a suit against the plaintiff in the Punjab and obtained a decree for a refund of the price of the stone and for damages. The plaintiff has now brought this suit asserting that it was the duty of the defendant to return the stone to him. The defendant's plea is that he is not bound to put himself to the expense and trouble of returning the stone, and that it was the business of the plaintiff to take the stone [326] away if he was so minded. The case appears to be covered by a decision of the Court of Common Pleas in England in the case of Grimoldby v. Wells (1). We hold that it was not the duty of the defendant to return the stone, and that the plaintiff has no cause of action against him. It was sufficient for the defendant to notify to the plaintiff that the stone was lying at Karnal at his risk. That, and more than that, has been done by the defendant in the present case. The decision of the lower appellate court cannot be supported. We allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all courts.

Hindu law—Hindu widow—Suit for declaration that mortgage by widow did not affect plaintiffs' reversionary rights—Plaintiffs not nearest reversioners.

Where plaintiffs sued as next reversioners for a declaration that a mortgage executed by a Hindu widow was not binding on them, and it was found that as a matter of fact even the nearest of the plaintiffs could only succeed to the estate if four males and one female died in his life-time; it was held that the plaintiffs ought not to have a decree.

[Fol. 40 All. 518=46 I. C. 186.]

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of a single Judge of the Court. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment under appeal, which was as follows: —

"This was a suit brought by the reversioners to the estate of Ram Saran Rai, to set aside the mortgage made by his widow, Musammat Mata Kunwar, in favour of the second defendant. It has been found by the lower appellate court that Ram Saran Rai left a son, who predeceased him; that the defendant Musammat Taluqa Kunwar, who has some minor children, is his daughter and that the defendant Mohender Rai is Ram Saran Rai's grandson by another daughter who has died. The plaintiffs are admittedly the reversioners who would come in after the sons of Ram Saran Rai's daughters. It has been found that the mortgage in question was without justifying necessity The court of first instance decreed the claim, but the lower appellate court has dismissed it on the ground that between the plaintiff and Musammat Mata Kunwar, who made the alienation, there intervene Taluqa Kunwar, her sons, and the defendant Mohendar Rai. It was alleged in the plaint that the persons who were nearer reversioners than the plaintiffs were in collusion with Musammat Mata Kunwar and the transferee from her. If this is so, the plaintiffs are entitled to [327] maintain the suit, as held in Rani Anand Kunwar v. The Court of Wards (2). The court below did not frame any issue on the question of collusion. As there are materials on the record which would enable this Court to come to a finding on the point, I have not deemed it necessary to refer an issue to the lower appellate court. Musammat Taluqa Kunwar, the daughter of Ram Saran Rai, in her written statement, supports the mortgage and so does Musammat Mata Kunwar, who is the guardian of Mohendar Rai. They live with Mata Kunwar, so that the persons who are nearer reversioners than the plaintiffs are in collusion with the first two defendants. That being so, the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration that the mortgage made by the first defendant will not affect their reversionary rights. I accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore that of the court of first instance with costs in all courts."

Mr. W. Wallach, The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, Munshi Gobind Prasad, and Munshi Benode Behari, for the appellants.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala and Munshi Gokul Prasad, for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J. and TUDBALL, J.—This appeal arises out of the following circumstances:—The plaintiffs sued alleging that they were the reversioners to a property which had been alienated by way of mortgage by one Musammat Mata Kunwar, the widow of Ram Saran Rai, and mother of one Jagmohan. The claim was that the mortgage made by the Musammat Mata Kunwar should be declared not to be binding upon the plaintiffs as reversioners. There was no allegation in the plaint that the plaintiffs were suing as distant reversioners, the nearer reversioners having done something to prevent them from bringing the suit. No such allegation was necessary, because, as already mentioned, the claim of the plaintiffs was that they were the next reversioners. This contention was based upon the allegation that Jagmohan survived his father Ram Saran Rai. The lower appellate court found that the plaintiffs' allegation that Jamohan survived Ram Saran Rai was not only false but was supported by fabricated evidence. The learned District Judge gives very cogent reasons for this finding, and in any event we are bound by it in second appeal. The result of this finding and a further finding of the lower appellate court that even the nearest of the plaintiffs can only succeed to the estate if four males and one female die in his life-time. The learned District Judge dismissed, and we think rightly dismissed, the plaintiffs' suit on these findings. [328] The learned Judge of this Court seeing an allegation in the plaint that there had been collusion between the transferee and the defendants 3 and 4 raised the issue whether or not the defendants 3 and 4 had done something which rendered them unfit to protect the estate and having come to a finding upon this issue in favour of the plaintiffs, decreed the plaintiffs' suit. We doubt very much that the plaintiffs would ever have brought the present suit at all if they had to do so in the capacity of reversioners who had four males and a female in front of them, and certainly suits for a declaration by remote reversioners are not to be encouraged. The learned Judge of this Court seems to have overlooked the fact that there were reversioners nearer than the plaintiffs who were not even parties to the suit at all, and other nearer reversioners were minors. Had the plaintiffs brought the present suit upon the allegation that they were the distant reversioners, and brought the suit as such we would not be disposed to interfere with the decision of the learned Judge of this Court merely on the ground that there was no specific allegation in the plaint that the nearer reversioners had precluded themselves from bringing the suit; but we think, in the circumstances of the present case and after the finding of the court against the plaintiffs as to their being the next reversioners to the property, that it was not right to read into the plaint an allegation that they were bringing the suit as distant reversioners because the nearer reversioners had either precluded themselves from bringing this suit or had refused to do so. We think that the present appeal, ought to be allowed. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of this court and restore the decree of the lower appellate court. The appellant will have his costs of both the hearings in this Court.

Act No XLV of 1860 (Indian Penal Code), sections 300 and 325—Murder—Grievous hurt—Common intention—Deadly assualt with lathis on an unarmed person—Presumption.

Four persons armed with lathis attacked and severely beat a fifth, who was unarmed, over a dispute about irrigation. The person attacked died in consequence of this beating, and it was found that he had received several severe blows on the head, the result of which was that the bones of the skull were broken to pieces, and also other injuries about the body, most of the injuries having probably been inflicted whilst the person attacked was on the ground; but the evidence did not disclose which of the assailants caused which of the injuries. Held, that all four assailants were properly convicted of murder under the fourth clause of section 300 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the inference was not justified that common intention of the assailants was not more than the causing of grievous hurt.

[Ref. 35 All. 506; Rel : 69 I. C. 449=23 Cr. L. J. 721.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

In the month of August, 1911, one Sujan was irrigating his field, when four persons—Kanhai, Diwan, Karan Singh and Ganga Sahai—came up armed with lathis and told him to stop, because they wanted to irrigate their own. A dispute ensued, and the four attacked Sujan, who was unarmed, and beat him severely so that he died. The medical evidence disclosed that several blows were inflicted on Sujan's skull, which resulted in a compound fracture thereof, the bones being broken into many pieces. In addition to these injuries to the head there were six injuries on other parts of the body, and it appeared that most of the injuries had been inflicted whilst the deceased was lying on the ground.

The four assailants were tried by the Assistant Sessions Judge of Aligarh and convicted under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment each. They appealed to the High Court, and their convictions and sentences were set aside and a fresh trial ordered. On the second trial they were convicted of the offence of murder and sentenced to transportation for life. From these convictions and sentences the four accused again appealed to the High Court.

They appealed to this Court and the learned Judge before whom their appeals came set aside the convictions and sentences and ordered them to be re-tried for the offence of murder under section 302, Indian Penal Code. convicted of that offence. The facts established by the evidence are briefly as follows :—In the month of August last, when there was a great demand for water for the purpose of irrigation and all cultivators were eager to get as much water as possible, the deceased was watering his field early in the morning before day-break, when the four accused, armed with lathis, went up to him and demanded that he should cease irrigating his field, so that they might irrigate their own. A wrangle ensued. The deceased was unarmed and defenceless. Finding that he was obstinate and would not give way, the four accused attacked him with their lathis. The medical evidence shows that several blows were inflicted on the skull, which resulted in the compound fracture thereof, the bones being broken into many pieces. In addition to these injuries on the head there were six injuries on other parts of the body. It is therefore quite clear that the accused inflicted a very severe beating, and that most of the injuries must have been inflicted when the deceased was lying on the ground. It is urged in their defence that the evidence does not disclose which of the injuries were inflicted by each of the accused respectively; that their common intention cannot possibly have been more than to voluntarily cause grievous hurt to the deceased, and that therefore, they ought to have been convicted under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code. We are unable to agree with this contention. The circumstances of the case and the fact that the accused were all armed with lathis; that the deceased was defenceless and unarmed; that the beating must have [331] been a prolonged one that several blows were inflicted on the skull completely smashing it, leave very little doubt that the intention of the accused was to inflict such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. The fourth clause of section 300 of the Indian Penal Code applies, and the accused have been rightly convicted of the offence of murder as defined in the Code. The lesser of the two sentences has been imposed, and there is no doubt as to the guilt of the accused. We therefore dismiss the appeal and maintain the convictions and sentences.

Commissioner in an application made under order XXII, rules 3 and 9, of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) by the appellant as the heir and legal representative of the plaintiff, which was filed and accepted by the Deputy Commissioner within the time allowed by law and an order was made on the 11th of September setting aside the dismissal of the suit, and substituting the name of the appellant on the record in place of the deceased pfaintiff. On an application for revision of the Deputy Commissioner's order of the 11th of September made by the respondent under section 115 of the Code to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, that Court reversed the order, and confirmed that decision on review, mainly on the grounds that the order of the 4th of July dismissing the suit was a proper order under order IX, rule 8, of the Code; that the appellant's application to set aside that order was not within time, and was therefore barred, and that order XXII, rule 3, of the Code applied only to a still pending suit, and not to one that had been dismissed.

Held (reversing the decisions of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner) that those decisions were vitiated by applying to a dead man orders and rules [332] applicable only to a mere defaulter. An "abuse of the process of the Court" within the meaning of section 151 of the Code had occurred by the course adopted in the Judicial Commissioner's Court. Quite apart from that section, any Court might rightly have considered itself to possess inherent power to rectify the mistake inadvertently made in dismissing the suit. The order of the Deputy Commissioner setting aside the dismissal was manifestly sensible and correct, and their Lordships restored it, and remitted the case to India to be disposed of on the merits.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (15th December, 1911) of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh (affirmed on review on the 20th of February, 1912), which reversed on appeal an order (11th September, 1911) of the court of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich.

On the 3rd of May, 1911, Raja Maneshar Bakhsh Singh, the father of the appellant, brought in the court of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich, a suit against the respondent for the recovery of arrears of rent under a lease, to which suit the respondent filed his defence on the 31st of May, and the suit was fixed for hearing on the 4th of July, 1911; Raja Maneshar Bakhsh Singh died on the 21st of June, 1911; and on the day fixed for hearing the suit was dismissed in default for non-appearance of the plaintiff.

On the 3rd of August, 1911, an application was made on behalf of the appellant as the heir and legal representative of his father, by his general agent, to the clerk or General Superintendent of the office of the Deputy Commissioner, under order XXII, rule 3, and order IX, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) in which the appellant stated that owing to the death of his father, and his being engaged in the performance of the necessary funeral ceremonies he had been unable to be present in court on the 4th of July; and prayed that the suit which had been dismissed in default might be restored, and that his name might be substituted for his father's on the record of the suit.

When leaving the application with the clerk, the appellant's agent said he had been waiting in the court since 2 p. m. (it was then 4-30 p. m.) to present it to the court, but that as the Deputy Commissioner had not taken applications on that day, he had been unable to do so. The General Superintendent reported this statement to the Deputy Commissioner, who on the 4th of August, 1911, made the following order :—" He was in my court and might have filed it then. It may be accepted."

[333] On the 11th of September, 1911, the Deputy Commissioner granted the application and made an order in the terms set out in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee.

On the 9th of October, 1911, the respondent applied to the Court of the Judical Commissioner of Oudh under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) for revision of the orders of the Deputy Commissioner of the 4th of August, and the 11th of September, 1911, and on the 5th of December, 1911, that Court (Mr. B. LINDSAY, 1st Additional Judicial Commissioner, and Mr. M. RAFIQ, 2nd Additional Judicial Commissioner) held that the application ought to have been dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner because the appellant had not reported to the authorities his succession to his father Maneshar Bakhsh Singh as required by clause 5 of section 34 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act (III of 1901); and because the application could not be entertained by the Deputy Commissioner as having been made more than 30 days after the dismissal of the suit. The clerk of the court, it was said, had no authority to receive the application, which therefore must be considered as not having been received until the 4th of August, 1911, and consequently out of time; that order XXII, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, did not give the legal representative six months within which to set aside the dismissal of the suit; and that the appellant had produced no evidence in support of his application. The Judicial Commissioner's Court accordingly set aside the orders of the Deputy Commsssioner which were under revision.

The appellant thereupon applied for a review of the judgment of the 5th of December, 1911, mainly on the grounds that the dismissal of the suit under order IX, rule 9, was ultra vires, that the court of the Deputy Commissioner had inherent jurisdiction under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside its own order, and that no effect had been given to order XXII, rule 3, of the Code.

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner (consisting of the same Judges as before) said—

" We are unable to admit that the Deputy Commissioner's order of dismissal was an order ultra vires. On the contrary it is clear that the order was intra vires, and one which the court was in the circumstances bound to make. The words of order IX, rule 8, are imperative :—' Where. . . the plaintiff does not [334] appear. . . the court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed'. There can be no doubt whatever that on the 4th of July, the plaintiff did not appear, and in the absence of any information as to the cause of his non-appearance we fail to see how the court could have acted otherwise than it did. It is said that the Deputy Commissioner could have ignored this previous order or could have set it aside under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But the case cannot be brought within the terms of section 151, for the court could not take action under that section seeing that a procedure for setting aside an order of dismissal is specially provided in order IX of the Code.

" It is said that the effect of our decision is to set at naught all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and the Limitation Act, which allow a period of six months within which the representative of a deceased party can apply to have his name substituted on the record . . . No doubt six months from the date of the decease of the plaintiff are allowed to his legal representative for the purpose of making an application to have his name brought on the record so as to enable him to continue the suit. But a reference to order XXII in general and to rule 3 of that order in particular shows clearly that what is contemplated in the cases referred to in order XXII is an application made while a suit is still pending. To take the words contained in rule 8 of that order—' The court . . . shall cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party, and shall proceed with the suit'. These last words obviously refer to a case which is still undecided. The court having made the substitution continues the hearing of the suit from the point to which it had advanced at the time when the deceased party died. In the present case the suit had come entirely to an end by virtue of the order of the 4th of July, 1911, by which the suit was dismissed for default and no substitution of the name of Debi Baksh Singh as plaintiff in place of his deceased father could be made unless and until the suit had been revived by means of an order passed under order IX, rule 9 . . . Debi Baksh Singh had in any case a remedy by application under order IX, rule 9, and he availed himself of it, but did not do so within the time (30 days from the date of the order of dismissal) prescribed by law. We are unable, therefore, to see how it can be said that our decision of the 5th of December, 1911, in any way ignores the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and the Limitation Act."

The application for review was consequently dismissed.

On this appeal, which was heard ex parte—

De Gruyther, K. C. and S. A. Kyffin for the appellants contended that pending an application to substitute on the record the appellant's name as heir to his deceased father, the suit had been wrongly dismissed for default of prosecution; and when it was brought to the notice of the Deputy Commissioner that the plaintiff's non-appearance was owing to his having died before the order dismissing the suit was made, the Deputy Commissioner had rightly held that the order of dismissal was not under the circumstances a proper order, and that the appellant [335] was entitled to continue the suit. The appellant applied within the time limited by law to be put on the record in place of his father, and was entitled to the further relief that the order of the 4th of July dismissing the suit should be set aside. The appellant's application having been admitted, and accepted by the order of the Deputy Commissioner as being within time, could not, it was submitted, be regarded as being barred by limitation. The provisions of clause 5 of section 34 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) did not operate as a bar to the continuance of the suit. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner had no power under the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) to interfere with the orders made by the Deputy Commissioner on the 4th of August and the 11th of September, 1911: any defect in procedure was cured by the powers conferred on the Deputy Commissioner by section 151 of the Code which justified his making the orders. The orders of the Court of Judicial Commissioner were erroneous and should be set aside. Reference was made to the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), section 115; order IX, rules 8 and 9; order XXII, rule 3, clauses (1) and (2); order XXII, rule 9, clauses (1) and (2): and the Limitation Act (IX of 1908), schedule I, article 176.

1913, April, 29*th*.—The reasons for the report of their Lordships were delivered by Lord SHAW:—

The appellant's father, Raja Maneshar Baksh Singh, instituted a suit against the respondent for payment of sums amounting to Rs. 15,908. The plaint was filed on the 3rd of May, 1911, in the court of the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich. The respondent filed his written statement on the 31st of May, 1911. On the 4th of July the following occurred before the Deputy Commissioner:—"On the case being called to-day the plaintiff was not present. I therefore dismiss the claim. Costs upon plaintiff."

The fact, unknown to the Deputy Commissioner, was that the plaintiff was dead. He had died about a fortnight before, namely, on the 21st of June. It is plain to their Lordships that, upon this being pointed out, it was the duty of the Deputy Commissioner to rectify the situation. This duty Mr. Clarke, the Deputy Commissioner, seems fully to have recognized. It requires no words of their Lordships to show the inapplicability of rules or orders dealing with the case of the non-appearance of a suitor to the [336] situation which arises when the suitor is dead. The principle of forfeiture of rights in consequence of a default in procedure by a party to a cause is a principle of punishment is respect of such default, but the punishment of the dead or the ranking of death under the category of default, does not seem to be very stateable.

The deceased plaintiff's son took the proper steps to have his name substituted in place of his deceased father under order XXII, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code. He did so on the 3rd of August, which was well within the period of six months' limitation under article 175 of the first schedule of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908. Some question arose as to the application being time-barred, but the latter was very properly accepted by Mr. Clarke. The appellant had also taken the proper steps to have a report of his succession made under section 34 of the Land Revenue Act.

On the 11th of September, 1911, the Deputy Commissioner pronounced the following order :—

"The case was dismissed as no one appeared on the previous hearing. This was due to the death of the Raja of Mallanpur. The other side claim that the re-hearing is barred under section 34 of the Land Revenue Act, but that section clearly requires a report of the succession, which has already been made. It is argued that the application is time-barred, but it was filed and accepted under my order within time. But I cannot allow any technicality to obscure the fact that the case was only not heard because of the calamity which prevented applicant's putting up this case. Under these circumstances I accept this application, and fix the 27th of October for hearing of issues, if necessary, and proof."

This order by the Deputy Commissioner is so manifestly sensible and correct that their Lordships are of opinion that it ought to be reverted to, and the case proceeded with accordingly.

On the 5th of October, 1911, however, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reversed the Deputy Commissioner's order and on the 20th of February, 1912, on review, that judgment was affirmed. In their Lordships' opinion these judgments cannot stand, being vitated by applying to a dead man orders and rules applicable to a defaulter. By the Code of Civil Procedure, section 151, it is provided that "nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice, or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court.' In their Lordships, [337] opinion such abuse has occurred by the course adopted in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Quite apart from section 151, any Court might have rightly considered itself to possess an inherent power to rectify the mistake which had been inadvertently made. But section 151 could never be invoked in a case clearer than the present, and their Lordships are at a loss to understand why, apart from points of procedure and otherwise, it was not taker advantage of.

Their Lordships have humbly advised His Majesty that the appeal be allowed, the order appealed from set aside and the order of the Deputy Commissioner of the 11th of September, 1911, restored, and that the appellant be found entitled to the costs of the proceedings since the 3rd of August, 1911, in India, and to the costs of this appeal. The suit will be remitted to India to be disposed of on the merits.

BRIJRAJ SINGH AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. SHEODAN SINGH AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) 2 *appeals consolidated.

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad.]

[16th and 17th April and 5th May, 1913.]

Hindu law—Partition—Requisites for partition—Partition created by so-called will in life-time of father dividing family property among his sons and taking no shares himself—Double share to eldest son—Unequal partition under alleged custom—Provision for forfeiture on mismanagement or bad behaviour—Conduct of Parties after execution of document of partition.

By a document called a " will " dated the 26th of November, 1895, the father and head of a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law recorded a division of the ancestral family property amongst his three sons (giving himself no share but allotting a double share to his eldest son). The document recited that, " my three sons are at present fully qualified to conduct the business. Therefore in order to avoid a dispute after my death I have at present, while in a sound state of body and mind, and of my own free will and accord, divided the property among my sons, heirs, as follows." Then followed the details of the division. There was a provision that, " If I at any time come back from pilgrimages and find mismanagement or character of any one bad then I shall have power to cancel this will which shall be enforced from the date of its execution " and the document concluded as follows :—" All the three sons were put in separate possession of the estate in the beginning of the year 1303 Fasli" [338] (September 1895) " I have no other heir having a right besides those mentioned in this will. I have therefore executed this will in order that it may serve as evidence." Mutations of the various shares were subsequently made into the names of those to whom they were separately allotted, and the evidence showed that the division had been assented to, acquiesced in and acted upon by the sons up to 1905. In a suit brought in September, 1905, four years after the father's death by the two younger sons for partition of the property which they alleged to be joint and undivided and of which they claimed to be entitled to two one-third shares.

Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that the document of the 26th of November, 1895, was not a will but was intended to operate from its date, and was in fact a family arrangement contemporaneously made and acted upon by all parties, the effect of which was, under the circumstances of the case, to create a partition of the joint ancestral property. There was nothing in the fact that the document was called a will which invalidated the partition which was undoubtedly made in fact, and which was acted upon for ten years without any dispute or misunderstanding as to the respective rights of the parties under it.

Held also that the provision in the will giving the father power to cancel it in certain events, evidenced a contractual condition which the sons accepted in order to obtain the partition which gave them immediate possession of the property and viewed thus the contractual acceptance of a power of forfeiture in case of bad behaviour would not be sufficient to prevent the partition operating in praesenti.

Two consolidated appeals (86 and 87 of 1912) from two judgments and decrees (17th May, 1910) of the High Court at Allahabad, which partly affirmed and partly reversed a judgment and decree (30th September, 1907) of the court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Aligarh.

The facts of the case are sufficiently stated in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee.

The parties and thair relationship appear from the following genealogical table.

RAO BALWANT SINGH, died 7th April 1901. = Rani Bhagwani Kunwar, died in 1307 Fasli (1899-1900).

- Rao Sultan Singh, died 30th March 1901. = Rani Piari Kunwar, Appellant.
  - Kunwar Brijraj Singh, Appellant.
- Rao Karan Singh, died 20th April 1909.
  - Kunwar Shibraj, Respondent.
- Kunwar Sheodan Singh, Respondent.
  - Kunwar Ranbir Singh, Respondent.

The case of the plaintiffs (now respondents) in the suit for partition out of which these appeals arose was that all the properties in suit were ancestral family properties which were in the [339] joint possession and enjoyment of the members down to the date of the suit, 13th September, 1905, and that they (the plaintiffs) were entitled to equal third shares thereof on partition.

The principal and now the only material defences of the defendants (now appellants) were (1) that the properties in suit were not ancestral but were the self-acquired properties of Rao Balwant Singh, and had been validly disposed of by him by his will; (2) that assuming the properties were ancestral a partition had been effected by Rao Balwant Singh in his life-time to which all his three sons had assented; and (3) that by family custom the eldest son was entitled on partition to a double share equivalent to a moiety of all the properties in suit.

On defence (1) the Subordinate Judge held that all the properties in suit were ancestral, and that holding was not disputed on appeal to the High Court.

The document purporting to be a will was dated the 26th of November, 1895, and was put in evidence by the defendants. It was executed by Rao Balwant Singh and declared, so far as is material to this report, as follows:—

"I have often been ill for the last 3 or 4 years and am unable to move about. The work in connection with my estate &c. is conducted through Chiranji Lal, general attorney, and Rao Sultan Singh, my eldest son. Now, I intend to sever my connection with the world, go on pilgrimages and visit other countries. Life is transient and uncertain. My three sons are at present fully qualified to conduct the business. Therefore in order to avoid a dispute after my death I have at present, while in a sound state of body and mind and of my own free will and accord, divided the property among my sons, heirs, as follows."

Then, after giving certain specific villages to his second and third sons and certain property to "my wife the Rani Sahib," Rao Balwant Singh gave other specific villages to—

"My eldest son, Rao Sultan Singh, and have installed him to the gaddi in my place He shall conduct the business like myself according to the custom of the family, and he being the head of the family was given a greater share than those given to both the sons aforesaid. All three sons and the Rani Sahib shall, after payment of the Government revenue, bring the profits of the villages into their valid use.

They shall have their names recorded in the revenue papers as provided by the will . . . After the death of the Rani Sahib, the wife of Rao Sultan Singh, shall according to the custom of the family be the owner of the entire sir lands (except the sir land in the village of Badri) belonging to the said Rani Sahib entered in papers, and in possession and enjoyment of the Rani Sahib. The Rani Sahib shall [340] have the sir land in the village of Badri recorded in the name of the wife of Kunwar Sheodan Singh because the share of Kunwar Sheodan Singh is less than that of Kunwar Karan Singh, therefore the Rani Sahib is permitted to have the sir land aforesaid recorded in the name of the wife of Kunwar Sheodan Singh The property and the village of Harsena " (given to his wife the Rani Sahib) " is divided into three equal shares amongst the grandsons, one of which shares was given to Brijraj Singh, son of Rao Sultan Singh, one to Shibraj Singh, son of Kunwar Karan Singh, and one to the son of Sheodan Singh . . . If I at any time come back from pilgrimages and find mismanagement or character of any one bad then I shall have power to cancel this will which shall be enforced from the date of its execution. All the three sons were put in separate possession of the estate in the beginning of the year 1303 Fasli I have no other heir having a right besides those mentioned in this will. I have therefore executed this will in order that it may serve as evidence."

35 A. 337=19 I. C. 826=17 C. W. N. 949 =11 A. L. J. 698=1913 M. W. N. 515= 18 C. L. J. 57 =15 Bom. L. R. 652=25 M. L. J. 188=40 I. A. 161.

The principal question for decision in the present appeal was whether there had been a partition of any part of the family properties binding on the plaintiffs during the life-time of Rao Balwant Singh.

As to this the Subordinate Judge held that a valid partition had been so made of the villages and certain other property of the family, but not of the house properties or movables. He treated the so-called will as a deed of partition, under which a family arrangement had been come to for a division of the properties (except as above) which had been acquiesced in by the plaintiffs who were therefore estopped from impeaching it as being an unequal partition. He found that the books of account on which the plaintiffs relied were fabricated; and that after the execution of the so-called will Rao Balwant Singh had lived the life of an ascetic. He accordingly made a preliminary decree for partition only of the house property and movables (the property he found to be undivided) and referred the matter to commissioners to ascertain how division should be carried out in detail, eventually, after consideration of their report passing a final decree in terms of his judgment then given.

As to the custom alleged by the defendants the only evidence was wajib-ul-arzes of 1873 and the Subordinate Judge said :

"It is stated in some of them that the gaddinashin is entitled to a double share, and in the rest that he is entitled to one share more than the others which means the same thing, that is, he will have two shares whereas the others will have one share each. The plaintiffs' objection to these wajul-ul-arzes is that they were dictated by one man only, namely, Rao Balwant Singh. But he was [341] the best man to know his family custom and his statements are admissible under section 49 (clause 1) of the Evidence Act and no evidence is adduced to the contrary . . . But let it be supposed that every bit of the property, movable as well as immovable, was ancestral and the plaintiffs 1 and 2 and Sultan Singh had absolutely equal rights to share it. Still by the Hindu law Balwant Singh was entitled to a share equal to his sons, and he could give his share to Sultan Singh and the result would be exactly that Sultan Singh would have got double of what each of his two brothers would get."

Both parties appealed from this decision to the High Court, the plaintiffs disputing the partition of the villages and lands under the will and the defendants asserting that a complete partition had been made thereby including the house property and movables.

The appeals were heard by Sir JOHN STANLEY, C. J. and GRIFFIN, J. who held that the document dated the 26th of November, 1895, could not be treated as a deed of partition, but was intended to operate only as the will of Rao Balwant Singh, that the account books relied on by the plaintiffs were genuine and supported the plaintiffs' contentions that no real partition of any of the family properties was effected in the life-time of Rao Balwant Singh, that his two younger sons had not assented to any final division of the estate, and that the allocation of the various villages among the different members of the family, and the mutation of names in the revenue records were only intended to provide for the management of the estate the enjoyment of the properties remaining joint until the date of suit. The High Court also held that the defendants had failed to establish that Rao Balwant Singh had retired from the world after the date of the will, or had become an ascetic, that the evidence showed that he continued to superintend the management of the properties until his death and that the family custom alleged by the defendants was not proved. The plaintiffs' appeal was accordingly allowed, a general partition of the family properties was decreed and the cross-appeal of the defendants was dismissed, a separate decree to that effect being passed. In concluding their judgment the High Court said :—

"It is found by the Court below that the arrangement made by Rao Balwant Singh was in the nature of a family settlement which was accepted by the members of the family and acted upon and that the plaintiffs are estopped from impeaching its validity. We cannot agree in this view. Rao [342] Balwant Singh no doubt intended to entrust the management of the estate to his sons and had mutation of names effected in their favour for this purpose ; but, as is evident from the language of his will, he did not intend to part with his control over it during his life. For the purpose of the management of the estate it was necessary that mutation of names should be effected, otherwise his sons would be unable to maintain suits against tenants or make lettings. It was with the object of making their management effective that mutation of names was effected, and the making of a will may have been a device whereby mutation could be obtained. Revenue officers will not effect mutation unless the devolution or transfer of property is proved to their satisfaction. In the orders for mutation before us it will be found that the transfers of the property are described as having taken place under the will of Rao Balwant Singh. It is true that the will was not operative during Rao Balwant Singh's life and ought not to have been acted upon, but this appears to have escaped the notice of the revenue officials. They were misled into believing that it effected a transfer.

"Then it is said that on the death of Sultan Singh his brothers assented to the name of Sultan Singh's son being recorded as owner in his place and it is contended that in view of this and of their acquiescence in the arrangement made by their father, Rao Balwant Singh, the plaintiffs are estopped from setting up the case that there was no binding partition of the family property. The parties were, during the life-time of Rao Balwant Singh, on friendly terms and remained so for about 2½ years after his death, and it was quite natural that on the death of Sultan Singh mutation of names should be effected in favour of his son in respect of the property of which he was the recorded owner. It was also not unnatural that the sir land which stood in the name of Bhagwan Kunwar, the widow of Rao Balwant Singh, should upon her death be recorded in the names of her three grandsons and that the village of Harsena should be recorded in the name of Sultan Singh's wife. It was also not unnatural as regards the 280 bighas of land, which are mentioned in the judgment, which stood in the name of Bhagwan Kunwar that upon her death the widow of Sultan Singh should be recorded in the place of Bhagwan Kunwar. In joint Hindu families we constantly find that portions of joint estate are recorded in the names of widows of the family and also in the names of different members of it. Sultan Singh was not prejudiced by any act of the plaintiffs or by their acquiescence in the arrangement devised by Rao Balwant Singh for the management during his life of the joint family property. If a partition had been intended, it is strange that the movable property of the family was not included in the partition. It is also noticeable that some house property of the family was not dealt with in any way in the arrangement made by Rao Balwant Singh.

"There is another matter to which we should refer. The defendants set up the case that according to a custom of the family, the eldest son is entitled to a double share of the joint family. The only evidence in support of this contention are extracts from several wajib-ul-arzes in which it is stated that a son occupying the gaddi shall get a share more than any of his brothers. There is no force in this contention. The statement in these wajib-ul-arzes is merely the expression of the view of the proprietor for the time being and does not establish any such custom as is contended for. This matter was not seriously pressed in argument.

[343] "The conclusion at which we have arrived is that Rao Balwant Singh entrusted the management of the principal part of the immovable property to his son with a view of getting rid of the burden of it during his life and purported by a will to regulate the devolution of the property after his death, thinking no doubt that his sons would acquiesce in any direction which he might during his life give in regard to the future enjoyment of the property. If the property had been self-acquired, his will would have been operative but as has been found and this is not now a matter in dispute, the property is joint ancestral property and the will can have no operation."

On this appeal—

De Gruyther, K. C. and B. Dube for the appellants contended that the document of the 26th of November, 1895, was the record of a family arrangement made by Rao Balwant Singh on behalf of his sons under which the entire family property was as divided between them according to the custom of the family and by Hindu law. The respondents had consented to the partition, as was clearly shown on the evidence and by their conduct, after acquiescing in the arrangement and acting under it for more than 10 years they were now estopped from impeaching it as being unequal and invaild under Hindu law. A partition had been created of the family property and the respondents were not, it was submitted, entitled to the reliefs claimed in the suit. Reference was made to Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (1), Parbati v. Naunihal Singh (2) and Raghuber Singh v. Moti Kunwar (3). The custom under which the eldest son took a double share had been proved and the fact that he had been allotted a larger share than the other sons would not in any case defeat the family arrangement which had been made. [Mr. AMEER ALI referred to Umjad Ali Khan v. Mohumdee Begum (4).]

The High Court had, it was contended, taken a wrong view of the object and intention of the deed of the 26th of November, 1895, which from its terms and the action taken under it was clearly meant to come into operation at once and was therefore not strictly speaking a "will," but that it was called a "will," made, it was submitted no alteration in its effect as a document creating a partition.

[344] Arthur Grey and G. R. Lowndes for the respondents contended that no valid or binding partition of the family properties or any part thereof had been made as alleged by the appellants. In any partition of the ancestral family properties the respondents were entitled in law to claim an equal division; Mayne's Hindu law, 7th edition, page 659, paragraph 488. The allocation of the various villages and lands purporting to have been made by or in accordance with the terms of the "will" amongst the members of the family was not intended to be and was not in fact a final partition of the said properties. The mutation proceedings did not constitute an estoppel on the respondents; if it was an admission it could be withdrawn as there was no obligation on them to make it: Muhammad Imam Ali Khan v. Husain Khan (5). There was no power in Rao Balwant Singh to make any disposition of the ancestral properties and there was no consent to his doing so on the part of respondents and none of them acquiesced in the division being a final one. Reference was made to Jugo Bandhoo Tawaree v. Karan Singh (6) as to the nature of the assent required and to show that an admission on a point of law was not an admission of a "thing," so as to make it a matter of estoppel within the meaning of section 115 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). Jagwant Singh v. Silan Singh (1) was referred to. There was no definite family agreement by which all the members would be bound: it was a scheme to give the eldest son a double share; and no custom to that effect had been proved. The case of Umjad Ali Khan v. Mohumdee Begum (2) was distinguishable from the present. The respondents, it was submitted, were entitled to the relief claimed and the High Court's decision should be upheld.

De Gruyther K. C. replied referring to and distinguishing the case of Muhammad Imam Ali Khan v. Husain Khan (3).

1913, May 5th:—The judgment of their Lordship was delivered by LORD MOULTON:—

This is a suit brought by two brothers Rao Karan Singh and Kunwar Sheodan Singh (with whom are joined as plaintiffs [345] their respective sons Kunwar Shibraj Singh and Kunwar Ranbir Singh), against the widow and son of their eldest brother Rao Sultan Singh, claiming a partition of certain properties which they allege to be the joint and undivided property of the family to which they belong in which they are entitled to a two-thirds share. The defence is that the properties originally belonging to the family were the subject of a division by a family arrangement made and acted upon in 1895 during the life-time of the father of the plaintiffs, and that thenceforward the properties ceased to be held jointly, and that those properties of which the defendants are in possession came to them under that family arrangement and became and still remain their separate property.

The principal subject of dispute is village property. But the suit relates also to certain other property, as to which different considerations arise. It will be convenient in the first instance to determine the questions in issue so far as they relate to the village property only and to consider subsequently the effect of the facts thus found on the rights of the parties in respect to the other property.

It will be seem from the foregoing that the real issue in the case is whether or not the alleged family arrangement was in fact made and assented to by the parties interested. The defendants' contention in this respect is exceptionally clear and precise. It leaves no doubt as to the terms of the arrangement even in their minutest details, and is equally definite as to the date when and the circumstances under which it was made

The father of the three brothers was Rao Balwant Singh. In 1895 he was the head of the family, which was then joint and undivided. The village property under his management, and to which this case relates, has been found by the court of first instance to have been ancestral property, and that finding is acquiesced in by the parties. He was at that date in advanced years and indifferent health, and determined to free himself from the labours of business and devote the remainder of his life to pilgrimages and travel in other countries. Accordingly, on the 26th of November, 1895, he drew up and executed a document (which he calls a will) setting out a division of the family property [346] among the members of the family, reserving nothing for himself. This is the family arrangement set up by the defendants.

Their Lordships incline to the view that the term "will," as applied to this document, was a complete misnomer. It is manifest that it differed from a will in the crucial characteristic that it was intended to speak from the date at which it was written and not from a future date, viz. the death of the writer. It was, in fact, and was intended to be viewed as a record of a family arrangement then and there made and carried into effect partitioning the family estate among those interested. Indeed, in anticipation of this formal partitioning, the sons had been put into possession of their shares some two months previously. All this appears from the concluding passage of the document, which reads as follows :—

"All the three sons were put in separate possession of the estate in the beginning of the year 1303 Fasli (September 1895). I have no other heir having a right besides those mentioned in this will. I have therefore executed this will in order that it may serve as evidence."

There is no doubt whatever as to the authenticity or date of this document. But the property was ancestral and therefore Rao Balwant Singh, although head of the family, had no right to make a partition by will of that property among the various members of the family except with their consent. They had independent rights in it with which he could not interfere. The main question, therefore, is whether there is evidence sufficient to establish the consent of the plaintiffs Rao Karan Singh and Kunwar Sheodan Singh to this family arrangement. If they accepted it, their acceptance would bind not only them but also their sons, who are the remaining plaintiffs, as they would be representing in the transaction their respective branches of the family.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the evidence of their acceptance of the partition is overwhelming. To appreciate it fully it will be necessary to examine in some detail the contents of the document itself and the acts of the parties consequent thereon.

That the document testifies to a partition of the estate taking place then and there cannot be doubted. The sons were all adults at the time, and, before setting out the specific shares which each was to receive, the document reads thus :—

[347] "My three sons are at present fully qualified to conduct the business. Therefore in order to avoid a dispute after my death I have at present, while in a sound state of body and mind and of my own free will and accord, divided the property among my sons. heirs, as follows."

There follows a specific division of the villages by name among the three sons. It then gives certain sir lands and other property to his wife for life and proceeds to provide that at her death the sir lands (with the exception of that in the village of Badri) shall go to the wife of the eldest according to the custom of the family. The sir land in the village of Badri is to go to the wife of the plaintiff Kunwar Sheodan Singh, "because the share of Kunwar Sheodan Singh is less than that of Kunwar Karan Singh," the other plaintiff. The remainder of the property held by the wife for life is at her death to be divided among her three grandsons. There are other minor details set out, but the above are the important provisions of the document and will suffice for the decision of the case.

This document was executed on the 26th of November, 1895. Early in 1896 the plaintiffs and their brother Rao Sultan Singh severally apply for mutation of names in respect of the villages allotted to them by their father in the document. It will suffice to refer to one of these applications, all of which mutatis mutandis are substantially identical. For this purpose the application of Kunwar Karan Singh in respect of the village Nagla Tula Ram may be taken. It is dated the 25th of February, 1896, and reads as follows :—

"Application for mutation of names in respect of 20 biswas of the zamindari property of the village of Nagla Tula Ram.

"The applicant begs to state as follows :—The applicant's father Rao Balwant Singh partitioned his property among his heirs under a registered will dated the 26th of November, 1895, and in accordance with the partition the 20 biswas of the villages of Bajripur and Nagla Tula Ram and 20 biswas of Khumanpur a hamlet of Jirauli Mahal Rao Balwant Singh fell to the applicant's share. Therefore this application is filed and it is prayed that according to it the name of Rao Balwant Singh may be expunged in respect of the village of Nagla Tula Ram and the applicant's name entered in the khewat. Separate applications have been filed in respect of the remaining villages. The applicant's elder brother Rao Sultan Singh has filed the original will in a case relating to the village of Sahaoli. It is also a proof in this case."

It will be well to follow up the proceeding thus initiated. On the 19th of March, 1896, we have the Tahsildar's record of the [348] hearing of the application and the order made thereon. It reads as follows :—

"Application for mutation of names in respect of 20 biswas of the village of Nagla Tula Ram, pargana Akrabad, according to partition of the property.

"Kunwar Karan Singh, applicant, v. Rao Balwant Singh.

"Under a will, filed with the record of the mutation case relating to the village of Sahaoli, Rao Balwant Singh, a rais of Sahaoli, divided his zamindari property among his sons. The 20 biswa property of the village of Nagla Tula Ram, in respect of which the name of Rao Balwant Singh stands recorded without the participation of anyone else, has fallen to the share of Kunwar Karan Singh. Kunwar Karan Singh prays that his name may be entered in respect of the village aforesaid. Rao Balwant Singh verifies the application and prays for expungement of his name. In spite of the expiry of the time given in the notice, no objection has been taken. From the office report the property is found to be correct. The patwari of the village says that Kunwar Karan Singh made collections and assessments for kharif of 1303 Fasli. As a transfer in possession has taken place, and no objection has been raised, the name of Rao Balwant Singh be expunged in respect of the village and the name of Kunwar Karan Singh entered in place of it. The record be submitted to the pargana officer for approval. A fee of Rs. 7 is deposited and the Treasury tender is filed with the record. No penalty is payable."

No more complete evidence that the family arrangement recorded in the so-called will was understood by all parties to be operative from the first and was acted on by them as such can be imagined than these two records, which are merely specimens of similar records relating to the other villages apportioned to the sons. It will be seen that the patwari of the village testifies to the applicant having made collections in 1303 Fasli (September 1895), thus confirming the truth of the statement in the so-called will that it was at that date that the sons entered into possession of the villages allotted to them. It should be added that direct evidence was given on behalf of the defendants that it was on that occasion that Rao Balwant Singh publicly announced his intention of making a partition of the property among the members of the family and gave the possession of the villages to the respective sons.

There is another set of transactions of a different date, which add strong confirmation to the defendants' case. Rao Sultan Singh died on the 30th of March, 1901, and his father, Rao Balwant Singh died a few days later on the 7th of April, 1901. Thereupon there ensued a situation such that the conduct of the parties must evidence almost conclusively whether the property was regarded as belonging to an undivided family, or whether each son of Rao [349] Balwant Singh held his portion separately. The importance of the situation is emphasized by the fact that the main grievance of the plaintiffs is that the share of the eldest brother is much larger than that of either of his brothers.

The conduct of the parties on this occasion was, in their Lordships' opinion, unambiguous and such as to show conclusively the truth of the defendants' contention. We find that application was made in July, 1901, by the widow of Rao Sultan Singh on behalf of her son Rao Brijraj Singh for mutation of names with regard to the property held by her late husband. The following is the record :—

"Amendment of khewat.

"Rao Brijraj Singh, minor, under the guardianship of Musammat Rani Piari Kunwar.

"In the matter of the death of Rao Sultan Singh.

"Village of Sumera alias Bijaigarh pargana Akrabad, the 17th July, 1901.

" To-day this case is put up in the presence of Kunwar Karan Singh and Kunwar Sheodan Singh and their statements have been taken down. They admit that the property aforesaid entered as holding No. 2 measuring 280 bighas stands recorded in the papers in the name of Rao Balwant Singh and that the same was declared to be in the share of Rao Sultan Singh under a will. Rao Sultan Singh is dead and his heir is Rao Brijraj Singh, whose name be entered. The patwari bears testimony to possession and others have taken no objection. It is

That the name of Rao Balwant Singh be expunged in respect of holding No. 2 and the name of Rao Brijraj Singh be entered in papers and that the Sadar Munsarim do comply with the order."

There then follows the record of the statement made by Kunwar Karan Singh on that application. It reads as follows : —

"Present : Haji Muhammad Makhdum Husain, Settlement Deputy Collector at Aligarh.

"17th July 1901.

"Rao Brijraj Singh, minor, under the guardianship of Musammat Rani Piari Kunwar in the matter of the death of Rao Sultan Singh.

His name should be recorded and I have nothing to do with it.

And on the same day the statement of the other plaintiff, Kunwar Sheodan Singh: — dants in substantially the same way as that which has been already given with respect to the village property.

It is now necessary to examine the evidence put forward by the plaintiffs in answer to the case of the defendants, based, as it is on the unbroken evidence of ten years' conduct of all parties. In the first place the plaintiff Kunwar Karan Singh does not give evidence at all, so that his acts as shown by the records remain undenied and unexplained. The plaintiff Kunwar Sheodan Singh, however, gave evidence. He makes no attempt to deny any of the matters above referred to nor does he give any explanation why he took no action until the year 1905, i.e., four years after the death of his father and brother and ten years after he had taken possession of his apportioned share. It is not too much to say that he did not attempt to show that there was a single fact known to him in 1905 when he instituted the suit which had not been known to him throughout. He makes it clear, however, that the family had lived in harmony till shortly before the suit was instituted, and lets it be seen that it was the pleaders whom he consulted who suggested that the claim made in this action should be set up. Taken as a whole his evidence leaves the defendants' case entirley unshaken.

The testimony mainly relied upon for the plaintiffs is that of Chiranji Lal. He had been the general agent or factor of Rao Balwant Singh, and continued to transact the business in respect of the village properties for the sons after 1303 Fasli (September [351] 1895). He was in a position to give most important evidence, for he must have known all the facts of the case, and if his evidence could be relied on, the fact that he gave evidence for the plaintiffs would have great weight. Unfortunately the very fact that he was in a position to know everything makes it impossible to accept his evidence as reliable. He was no more able to explain away the public acts of the plaintiffs to which reference has been made than could they themselves, and the contrast between his evidence and their conduct is enough of itself to throw the gravest doubt on the reliability of that evidence.

But an examination of his evidence shows in other ways that it is unreliable. Separate account books of the villages allotted to Sultan Singh were put to him by the defendants, and he admitted that they were in his own handwriting, and kept by him. One of these books contains the receipts of those villages, in the case of the year 1897. He admits that it contains a statement in his own handwriting that Sultan Singh is the proprietor of the property. He also admits that, so far as entries of expenditure are concerned, they relate only to the expenditure of Sultan Singh. Another relates to the year 1902. It contains the accounts of the same villages with a statement in his own handwriting that Brijraj Singh is the proprietor, and admittedly the items of expenditure relate to him alone. These books demonstrate the falsity of the rest of his evidence. It is true that he produced collective account books for all the villages purporting to show that the property was enjoyed in common in spite of the partition. There are numerous discrepancies between these and the separate account books which he alleges were compiled from them, and he is wholly unable to account for these discrepancies or indeed for the existence of the separate account books at all. The learned Judge of first instance, who saw the witness and examined the books, came to the conclusion that these collective account books were not genuine, and their Lordships have no doubt that this conclusion was correct.

The claim of the plaintiffs in this action evidently arose from the sugggestion of the pleaders whom they consulted after quarrels arose in the family, and was based on the fact that the document which evidences the partition is termed a will. It is obvious that [352] such a partition could not have been made by Balwant Singh by will strictly so-called. But, as has been already pointed out, the document is much more than a will (if indeed it is in any sense a will at all), for it describes and witnesses to a family arrangement contemporaneously made and acted on by all parties. Everyone treated it as such at the time. The mutations of names show this beyond controversy. There is nothing, therefore, in the fact that the document is called a will which invalidates the partition, which was undoubtedly made in fact, and which was acted on by all parties for ten years without any dispute or misunderstanding as to their respective rights under it.

Counsels for the plaintiffs have endeavoured to support the contention that the partition was not intended to take effect in praesenti by reference to a provision to be found in this document. It reads as follows:—

"If I at any time come back from pilgrimages and find 'mismanagement or character of any one bad, then I shall have power to cancel this will, which shall be enforced from the date of its execution."

Their Lordships are of opinion that the highest effect that can be given to such words is that this evidences a contractual condition which the sons accepted in order to obtain the partition which gave them immediate possession of the property, and viewed thus, the contractual acceptance of a power of forfeiture in case of bad behaviour would not, in their Lordships' opinion, be sufficient to prevent the partition operating in praesenti. But the true interpretation of the provision is probably that it was merely put in as a threat in order to keep the sons in good behaviour, and that it could not have been enforced specifically, or even at all. It is certainly quite insufficient to outweigh the overwhelming evidence that this was a family arrangement accepted by all parties.

The above considerations relate only to the village property. In addition to this there were two buildings, one in Aligarh and the other at Sahaoli. The disposition in the document relating to these buildings is peculiar and did not in the opinion of the learned Judge of first instance amount to an absolute disposition of them, and their Lordships are not prepared to differ from his views on this point.

There remains the movable property. As to this the family arrangement is absolutely silent. The plaintiffs are therefore [353] entitled to their share of these movables as inherited property.

It will be seen therefore that their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the learned Judge of first instance was right on all points. Both plaintiffs and defendants appealed from his decision to the High Court. That Court allowed the plaintiffs' appeal and dismissed that of the defendants. The defendants appealed from both of these decisions. In their Lordships' opinion the High Court ought to have dismissed both appeals. They will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the order of the High Court allowing the plaintiffs' appeal should be discharged with costs, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored, and that the order of the High Court dismissing the defendants' appeal should be affirmed. The plaintiffs must pay the costs of the defendants' appeal to His Majesty in Council, and the defandants must pay the costs of their unsuccessful appeal.

THE facts of this case were as follows: —

The suit was brought on the basis of three mortgage deeds, of which one only was the subject of dispute when the case came in second appeal before the High Court. This was a mortgage executed by Kallu, on the 15th of March, 1890 in favour of the respondents. The appellant was the purchaser of the equity of redemption at an auction sale held on the 20th of January, 1909, in execution of a simple money decree against Kallu alone. Kallu and his sons and the appellant were made defendants in the suit. The appellant alone contested it. He questioned the execution and the payment of consideration, and stated that Kallu had no necessity to borrow at all. The plaintiffs examined only one attesting witness to the deed in question and he deposed that the mark of the executant Kallu had not been made in his presence. The Court of first instance held the execution and part of the consideration proved and allowed the claim to that extent. On appeal the District Judge decreed the claim in full, holding that the recital of receipt of consideration in the bond and the registration endorsement were sufficient evidence, which was unrebutted, against the appellant. As to the plea of want of legal necessity the District Judge refused to entertain it, on the ground that the plea had not been specifically raised in the court of first instance, which had framed no issue regarding it. The defendant appealed.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (for Babu Durga Charan Banerji), for the appellant:—

The plaintiffs have not proved that the bond was properly attested within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is no mortgage; Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Ravuthan (5). Secondly, the recital in the bond is not binding upon the appellant who is an auction purchaser; Manohar Singh v. Sumirta Kuar (1), Bisheswar Dayal v. Harbans Sahay (2). In the recent case of Bihari Lal v. Makhdum Bakhsh (3) the case of an auction-purchaser was left open. There the purchaser was one who had obtained a private transfer. It has been held in [355] some cases that an estoppel which is operative against the judgment-debtor need not necessarily be operative against the auction-purchaser; Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (4). Thirdly, the District Judge should have entertained the plea of want of legal necessity. The plea was raised in the written statement. A purchaser is entitled to raise the plea; Muhammad Muzamil-ullah Khan v. Mithu Lal (5).

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (for Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri,) for the respondents, was heard on the first and the third points:—

The case was decided by the two lower courts previous to the publication of the ruling of the Privy Council cited by the appellant. According to the view which prevailed before that ruling the bond in dispute would be regarded as validly attested and sufficiently proved, as the materials now stand on the record. Under the circumstances an opportunity ought to be given to the respondents to produce the other attesting witnesses and prove the document in the light of that ruling.

Then, the appellant is the auction purchaser of Kallu's interest alone and not of that of the sons. His position is no higher than that of Kallu, and he can not raise any pleas not permissible to Kallu himself. Therefore, he is not entitled to raise the question of want of legal necessity. In the case in I. L. R. 33 All. relied on by the appellant, the purchaser, besides being a transferee from the mortgagor alone, had acquired by adverse posssssion a title to the whole of the family property as against all the members of the family. In the present case the appellant has acquired nothing beyond Kallu's interest.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, in reply:—On a sale in execution of a simple money decree against the father alone it is not only the interest of the father that can pass, but the whole family property including the sons' interest can pass, unless the sons prove that the debt was tainted with immorality. In the absence of any such action on the sons' part it must be taken that the appellant purchased the whole family property and is thus entitled to raise the plea of legal necessity.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ.:—This was a suit by the respondents on three mortgages, dated the 18th of August, 1878, the 15th of [356] March, 1890, and 13th of November, 1898, but for the purposes of the present appeal we may regard it as a suit on the mortgage of the 15th of March, 1890, only. The first defendant to the suit was Kallu, the executant of the mortgage. Defendants 2, 3 and 4 were the sons of Kallu. Defendant 5 was a lessee of the mortgaged property, and defendant 6, who is the appellant here, is a purchaser of the property in execution of a money decree obtained by him against the defendant Kallu. The appellant put the respondents to proof of the mortgage and of the passing of the consideration and he also pleaded that the mortgage had been made without necessity. The first court held that the execution of the mortgage was proved by the evidence of two witnesses Raghunath Prasad and Bhudeo, but that the passing of a portion of the consideration had not been proved.

That court accordingly gave this respondent a decree for part only of the sum secured by the mortgage. On appeal the District Judge agreed with the court of first instance that the execution of the mortgage had been proved and held that it was not open to the present appellant to challenge the deed on the ground that it was not supported by necessity. On the evidence he came to the conclusion that the passing of the whole of the consideration for the deed had been proved and he varied the decree of the first court accordingly. In second appeal it is contended:—(1) that the District Judge was wrong in holding that an admission as to the receipt of the consideration made by the executant Kallu in the deed and again before the registering officer was admissible in evidence against the appellant, the auction-purchaser of the property, (2) that the appellant was entitled to raise the question of legal necessity, and (3) that the evidence relied on as proof of the execution of the deed did not as a matter of law amount to proof of the execution of the deed.

The question whether admissions such as those made by Kallu in the present case are admissible against a subsequent auction-purchaser of the property was left open by our decision in Bihari Lal v. Makhdum Bakhsh (1). All that was held in that case was that such admissions are admissible against a subsequent purchaser of the property by a private treaty. But on the authorities we must hold that there is no real ground for distinguishing between [357] the case of an auction-purchaser and the case of a purchaser by private treaty. The decision of this Court in Manohar Singh v. Sumirta Kuar (2), has been relied on as authority for the proposition that such admissions are not admissible against a subsequent auction-purchaser of the property. The decision in that case was pronounced shortly before the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, in Mahomed Mozuffer Hossein v. Kishori Mohun Roy (3) was received in this country. In that case their Lordships said that " where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate and a third person purchases it for value from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing either that he had direct notice or at least constructive notice of the real title " and their Lordships decided that this rule applied to a subsequent auction-purchaser of the property. Their Lordships said :— " This principle applies to Abdul Ali, and the appellants are in the same position, as they purchased only his right, title and interest and are equally bound by it." If such an estoppel is binding upon a subsequent auction-purchaser, there can be no doubt that an admission made with reference to property is admissible in evidence againt a subsequent auction-purchaser of the property. The value of the admission is another matter. The appellant in the present case must be held to be the representative in interest of Kallu and the statements made by Kallu in the deed and before the registering officer are therefore admissible against him. If there is no ground for distinguishing between the case of an auction-purchaser and the case of a purchaser by private treaty, there can be no doubt of the admissibility in evidence of the statements made by Kallu. On this point there are several recent decisions of this Court. The first ground of appeal, therefore, fails.

With regard to the second ground of appeal, the appellant must be regarded as a purchaser of the rights of Kallu only. His purchase was made as recently as 1909 and might yet be challenged by Kallu's son. He is, therefore, in a different position [358] from that occupied by the purchaser in the case of Muhammad Muzamil-ullah Khan v. Mithu Lal (1). In that case it was held by the majority of the Court that the purchaser was entitled to challenge a mortgage made by one member of a Hindu family, because he had acquired title to the property, by adverse possession against all the members. We must therefore, hold that the appellant is not entitled to raise the question of the validity of the mortgage.

With regard to the third ground of appeal we think there ought to be a further inquiry by the lower appellate Court. It appears that there were three supposed attesting witnesses to the mortgage. One named Raghunath Prasad, who was called, said that Kallu did not sign the deed in his presence, therefore, he was not an attesting witness. There is evidence that another supposed attesting witness named Sundar Lal is dead. Nothing is known about the third attesting witness. The respondent in all probability relied on a decision of this Court according to which the evidence of Raghunath Prasad, if believed, was sufficient evidence of the execution. In view of a recent decision of the Privy Council it must be held on the record as it stands that the bond in suit has not been proved. In the circumstances we think that the respondent should be given a further opportunity of producing evidence. We direct that the record be returned to the court below for a fresh finding on the question whether the mortgage deed of the 15th of March, 1890, has been proved. Further evidence will be taken; and on return of the finding ten days will be allowed for objections.

Issue remitted.

Act (Local) No. IV of 1910 (United Provinces Excise Act), section 63—Criminal Procedure Code, section 537—Unlawful possession of excisable article—Search warrant—Conviction not invalidated owing to absence of warrant.

Where the superintendent of police and a sub-inspector searched the house of a person suspected of being in illicit possession of excisable article and such [359] articles were found in the house searched, it was held that the conviction of the owner of the house under section 63 of the United Provinces Excise Act 1910, was not rendered invalid by the fact that no warrant had been issued for the search, although it was presumably the intention of the Legislature that in a case under section 63, where it was necessary to search a house, a search warrant should be obtained beforehand.

was in illicit possession of excisable articles within the meaning of section 63 of the United Provinces Excise Act, 1910, and a mixture of cocaine with another drug was found in it. No search warrant had been obtained for the search. The finding of the cocaine was established by evidence and the accused was convicted under the Excise Act. On appeal the Sessions Judge held that the search was illegal and that the illegality vitiated the proceedings, and he acquitted the accused. The Local Government appealed.

The Government Advocate (Mr. A. E. Ryves), for the Crown :—

The police officers who conducted the search had a right to do so without a search warrant. Section 50 of the United Provinces Excise Act (IV of 1910) authorised them to do so. They had authority to make the search also under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. Secondly the irregularity in conducting the search is covered by the provisions of section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The words, "other proceedings before or during trial" in clause (a) of that section cover the case. Thirdly, an irregular search does not vitiate the trial and render the conviction illegal. It does not affect the question whether the accused was guilty or not. If the facts found establish his guilt the conviction is perfectly legal.

Mr. Hameed-ullah, for the accused :—

Section 50 of the Excise Act provides for immediate action only in urgent cases. This appears to have been intended from a consideration of the words "found committing an act, &c." in that section and of the succeeding sections 51, 53 and 54. If there is time to get out a search-warrant then a warrant should be obtained. In the present case there was ample time to get out a warrant. Section 537 is not meant to cure erroneous or illegal proceedings of the police but only of courts.

[360] GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ :—One Allahdad Khan was convicted of an offence punishable under section 63 of the United Provinces Excise Act, No. IV of 1910, which provides as follows :—

"Whoever, without lawful authority, has in his possession any quantity of any excisable article knowing the same to have been unlawfully imported, transported or manufactured, and knowing the prescribed duty not to have been paid thereon, shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both"

The Superintendent of Police and the Sub-Inspector in charge of the City Police station, on information received, searched the house of Allahdad Khan and discovered there a mixture of cocaine and another drug. The accused was convicted by a Magistrate and sentenced to six weeks' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50. On appeal the Additional Sessions Judge held that the search of the accused's house was illegal and that the absence of a search warrant was fatal to the case for the prosecution. He therefore acquitted the accused. The Local Government has appealed against the order of acquittal. It is doubtful whether the case is one which comes under the provisions of section 50 of the Excise Act, and we would have some hesitation in holding that the search was legal. Whether the search was legal or not, we have, however, the evidence of the finding in the accused's house of a certain quantity of cocaine, which is an excisable article under the provisions of the Excise Act, for possession of which the accused had no license. On the facts found we are satisfied that the accused must have known that the cocaine had been unlawfully imported and that no duty had been paid on it. We allow the appeal, set aside the order of acquittal passed by the Additional Sessions Judge and restore the order of conviction. We reduce the sentence passed on the accused to the term of imprisonment already undergone by him and we set aside the order of fine. We may add that we think that it was the intention of the Legislature that in a case under section 63, where it is necessary to search a house, a search warrant should be obtained beforehand.

Appeal allowed and sentence reduced.

EMPEROR v. BIMALA CHARAN ROY.*

Act No XLV of 1860 (Indian Penal Code), sections 406 and 408—Criminal breach of trust —Water Works Inspector misappropriating water—Money realised as water tax not credited to the municipality.

Where a Municipal Water Works Inspector, being the lessor of a house within Municipal limits which he had sub-let, had such house connected with a municipal water main and accepted a yearly payment as water tax from his tenants but neither informed the municipal board that the connection had been made nor credited to the board the money which he received as water tax from his tenants, it was held that he was properly convicted under sections 406 and 408 of the Indian Penal Code, whether or not he might have been punishable under the United Provinces Water Works Act, 1891.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

One Bimala Charan Roy was a water-works inspector in the service of the Municipality of Cawnpore on Rs. 140 per mensem. He rented two houses situated in one compound No. 67/23 in Mohalla Patkapur in the city of Cawnpore. He himself lived in the larger house and let the other house to two brothers Surendra Nath and Birendra Nath Banerji at a rent of Rs. 3 per mensem. Water was laid on to the larger house, but not to the smaller one. The tenants of the smaller house wanted the water to be laid on to their house and spoke about it to the applicant. The latter tapped the principal main which ran on the east side of the compound No. 67/23 and connected it by means of an old pipe to the smaller house and to his garden on the west. The work was done under the orders of the applicant by the plumbers and fitters of the municipality, who were his subordinates. No report of the new connection was made to the municipality. The applicant represented to his tenants that the municipal tax for the two pipes, namely one in the smaller house, and the other in the garden, came to Rs. 9, and that he and they, the tenants, should pay the tax in equal shares. The tenants agreed to the proposal of the applicant and paid him Rs. 9 for two years. Some time in 1911 the applicant was either dismissed by the municipality or left their service. It was after the severance of his connection with the municipality that it was discovered that water was laid [362] on to the smaller house and the garden for which no tax had been paid to the municipality. After a careful investigation a prosecution was started against the applicant which resulted in his conviction under sections 406 and 408 of the Indian Penal Code, and on appeal his conviction and sentence were upheld by the Sessions Judge. Bimala Charan Roy applied in revision to the High Court.

Mr. W. Wallach, Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji and Babu Sital Prasad Ghose for the applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

MUHAMMAD RAFIQ J.—This is an application in revision under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code from an appellate order of the learned Sessions Judge of Cawnpore maintaining the convictions and sentences passed on the applicant under sections 406 and 408 of the Indian Penal Code. The facts which led to the conviction of the appellant are as follows. The applicant Bimala Charan Roy was the water-works inspector in the service of the municipality of Cawnpore on Rs. 140 per mensem. He rented two houses situated in one compound No. 67/23 in mohalla Patkapur in the city of Cawnpore. He himself lived in the larger house and let the other house to two brothers Surendra Nath and Birendra Nath Banerji at a rent of Rs. 3 per mensem. It seems that water was laid on to the larger house but not to the smaller one. The tenants of the smaller house wanted the water to be laid on to their house and spoke about it to the applicant. The latter tapped the principal main which ran on the east side of the compound No. 67/23 and connected it by means of an old pipe to the smaller house and to his garden on the west. The work was done under the orders of the applicant by the plumbers and fitters of the municipality, who were his subordinates. No report of the new connection was made to the municipality. The applicant represented to his tenants that the municipal tax for the two pipes, namely one in the smaller house, and the other in the garden, came to Rs. 9, and that he and they, the tenants, should pay the tax in equal shares. The tenants agreed to the proposal of the applicant and paid him Rs 9 for two years. Some time in 1911 the applicant was either dismissed by the municipality or left their service. It was after the severance of his connection [363] with the municipality that it was discovered that water was laid on to the smaller house and the garden, for which no tax had been paid to the municipality. After a careful investigation a prosecution was started against the applicant which resulted in his conviction. The facts just related have been found by the two lower courts against the applicant. The learned counsel for the applicant has advanced two contentions in support of the applicant that the offence deducible from the facts found by the lower courts is one that falls under section 45 of the Water Works Act, or one of theft, or cheating. No offence under section 406, or 408 of the Indian Penal Code, it is said, has been made out. I do not agree with the contention of the learned counsel for the applicant. The applicant was a member of the municipality at Cawnpore and one of his duties was to supervise and check the distribution of water from the municipal water-works. In other words he had dominion over the water belonging to the municipality. He deliberately misappropriated that water for his own use and for the use of his tenants, for which he paid no tax and about which he laid no information to his employers nor obtained permission for tapping the main. In this misappropriating municipal water the applicant clearly committed the offence described in section 408 of the Indian Penal Code. The conduct of the applicant in realizing money from his tenants on account of water tax and misappropriating that money to himself clearly falls under the offence described in section 406 of the Indian Penal Code. There was a distinct contract between himself and his tenants that the money which the latter were paying was paid on account of water tax, and the applicant in keeping that money committed criminal breach of trust. It may be that the offences of applicant may be punishable under the Water Works Act also, but that does not vitiate the conviction under sections 406 and 408 of the Indian Penal Code.

The second point urged on his behalf and urged with great force is that he being a literate respectable man should not have been dealt with so severely as he has been by the lower court. The learned counsel for the applicant urges strongly the claim of his client for the reduction of the sentence. I do not think that because the applicant is literate he should be dealt with less [364] severely than an ignorant man. In fact his position as a servant of the municipality and as a literate person calls for a more severe sentence than if he were an ignorant man unconnected with the municipality. The application fails and is rejected. The applicant must surrender to his bail before the Magistrate.

Application rejected.

Act No. I of 1872 (Indian Evidence Act), sections 69 and 70—Evidence—Mortgage—Proof of execution of mortgage—Mortgagors illiterate, and both they and the attesting witnesses dead before suit brought.

A mortgage deed was on the face of it executed in 1889 by three illiterate mortgagors, who affixed their marks, and was attested by more than two witnesses At the time of the institution of a suit for sale thereon, all the executants and the attesting witnesses were dead, and the evidence tendered in proof of the mortgage consisted of (1) the statement of a witness who professed to be acquainted with the handwriting of two of the attesting witnesses, (2) a deed of usufructuary mortgage executed by one of the executants of the mortgage in suit and by the representative of the two other executants, which referred to and recognized the genuineness of the mortgage in suit, and (3) a deed of sale executed in 1902 by the representatives or some of the representatives of the executants of the deed in suit, which recognized the genuineness of the usufructuary mortgage mentioned above.

Held that, having regard to sections 69 and 70 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, this evidence was not sufficient to prove the mortgage in suit.

[Ref. 4 Pat. L. J. 511=53 I. C. 79.]

THIS was suit for sale on a mortgage purporting to be executed in 1899 by three persons—Khushal Singh, Moti Singh and Baljit Singh. The executants, being illiterate, had merely made their marks on the document. The deed was also attested by several witnesses. At the time of suit all the executants and the attesting witnesses were dead, and the evidence tendered in proof of the mortgage consisted of (1) the statement of a witness who professed to be acquainted with the handwriting of two of the attesting witnesses, (2) a deed of usufructuary mortgage executed by one of the executants of the mortgage in suit and by the representative of the two other executants, which referred to and [365] recognized the genuineness of the mortgage in suit, and (3) a deed of sale executed in 1902 by the representatives or some of the representatives of the executants of the deed in suit, which recognized the genuineness of the usufrutuary mortgage mentioned above. Both the courts below accepted this evidence as sufficient to prove the mortgage and gave the plaintiff a decree accordingly. Some of the defendants appealed to the High Court and contended that the lower court was wrong in holding that execution of the mortgage in suit had been proved within the meaning of section 69 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji, for the appellants :—

The mortgage-deed in suit has not been proved as required by section 68 and section 69 of the Evidence Act. There is no proof that the signatures of the executants are in their handwriting. The provisions of section 69 are imperative and are not satisfied by proving a later deed of usufructuary mortgage in which the deed in suit has been recited. Secondly, some of the representatives in interest of the executants of the deed in suit did not join in executing the usufructuary mortgage or the sale deed. They are, therefore, not bound by any admissions contained in those two documents.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the respondents :—

The plaintiff produced the best evidence that could possibly be given under the circumstances in proof of the mortgage in suit. Section 69 does not say that direct evidence alone must be given in proof of the signature of the executant. Where direct evidence is not available, the execution may be proved by indirect evidence. Accordingly, proof of the later deed which recites the deed in suit is sufficient proof of the latter. The Indian law of evidence is founded on the English law. Section 69 should, therefore, be supplemented by the English rules of evidence which provide that in cases like the present the document can be proved by secondary evidence of handwriting, or by presumption or by any other evidence ; Phipson : Evidence (5th Edition), page 494, Taylor : Evidence (9th Edition), page 1214.

Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji was not heard in reply.

GRIFFIN and CHAMIER, JJ. :—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondent Hori Lal on a mortgage made in his [366] favour on the 22nd of November, 1889, by three persons, Khushal Singh, Moti Singh and Baljit Singh. Both the courts below have found that the mortgage in suit has been proved and have decreed the claim. This is a second appeal some of the defendants, who contend, and have throughout contended, that the mortgage deed has not been proved. Other points are taken in the appeal to this Court. But, in the view we take of the question of the proof of the deed in suit, it is unnecessary to refer to them. The three executants of the deed, being unable to write, made their marks. All three of them and all the attesting witnesses to the deed died before this suit was brought. The evidence adduced to prove the document consists of (1) the statement of a witness named Lalta Prasad, who claimed to be acquainted with the handwriting of two of the attesting witnesses, (2) a deed of usufructuary mortgage executed by one of the executants of the mortgage in suit and by the representative of the two other executants, which refers to and recognizes the genuineness of the mortgage in suit, and (3) a deed of sale executed in 1902 by the representatives or some of the representatives of the executants of the deed in suit, which recognizes the genuineness of the usufructuary mortgage mentioned above. This evidence leaves little doubt in our mind that the mortgage in suit is genuine, and it has been accepted by both the courts below as sufficient. But it is contended that the evidence, other than the statement of the witness Lalta Prasad, is not evidence of the kind required by law. The appellants rely on section 69 of the Evidence Act, which provides that "if no such attesting witness can be found, or if the document purports to have been executed in the United Kingdom it must be proved that the attestation of one attesting witness, at least, is in his handwriting and that the signature of the person executing the document is in the handwriting of that person." The evidence of Lalta Prasad proves that the attestation of two of the attesting witnesses is in their handwriting. But it appears to us that the two deeds relied upon are not evidence that the signatures of the persons executing the document are in their hand-writing. In was contended on behalf of the plaintiff respondent that the usufructuary mortgage and the deed of sale prove indirectly that the signatures of the three executants are [367] in their handwriting. Section 69 of the Evidence Act reproduces, as regards attesting witnesses, part of a rule of the English law. According to that law where a document is required by law to be attested one attesting witness at least must be called. But there are several exceptions to this rule, one being that if the attesting witnesses are dead, insane, out of the jurisdiction or cannot be found, secondary evidence of the execution may be given by proof of the hand-writing of the witnesses or, if this is not obtainable, by presumptive or any other available evidence. (See the cases cited at page 494 of Phipson on Evidence, fifth edition; and paragraph 1851 on page 1214 of the 9th edition of Taylor on Evidence). It is quite clear that in England it is recognized that there is a distinction between proof of the handwriting of a person and presumptive or other evidence that a document has been executed. The Indian law does not in a case of this kind appear to allow a party to rely on presumptive or other evidence of execution, where he is unable to comply with the provisions of section 69, either as regards the attestation of the attesting witnesses or as regards the signatures of the executants. In our opinion the evidence adduced by the plaintiff respondent in the present case, to prove the signatures of the deed in suit, does not comply with section 69 and we must, therefore, hold that the deed has not been proved. It was pointed out that one of the executants of the deed admitted execution by himself in one of the later deeds and section 70 was referred to, but that does not avail the plaintiff respondent, for it is not sufficient for his purpose to prove the admission of execution by only one party to the document. It appears to be a hard case, but the plaintiff respondent has himself to thank for the result. He deferred instituting the suit until all the attesting witnesses had died, knowing that the executants, who could only make marks, had made their marks on the deed. In any case he had considerable difficulty in producing proper evidence of execution. We allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's claim with costs in all courts.

THIS was a claim for compensation under the Land Acquisition Act. The claimant had been allowed Rs. 7,900 out of a much larger sum demanded and appealed as to the balance. The only point in the case material for the purposes of this report was that the judgment had been written by the Judge who tried the case after he had made over charge as judge of the particular judicial division, and was pronounced by his successor in office. On these grounds it was contended in appeal that the judgment was invalid.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the appellant.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the respondent.

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit under the Land Acquisition Act. The property in respect of which the claim arises is situate in Allahabad, not far from the Muir Central College, for which institution it was acquired. The appellant has been awarded the sum of Rs. 7,900. In his appeal he claims a further sum of Rs. 32,000. There can be no doubt that if the appellant was the absolute owner of the property in dispute or even if he had a permanent interest therein subject only to the payment of Rs. 48-8-0 per annum to Government, he would be entitled to a considerably larger sum than has been awarded to him by the court below. We have considered the evidence, and we entirely agree with the court below that the appellant has not shown that he had any permanent interest in the plot. In our opinion his tenure amounted to no more than a tenancy from year to year.

We have been referred to Naba Kumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (2), Nanda Lal Goswami v. Atarmani Dasee (3), [369] Upendra Krishna Mandal v. Ismail Khan Mahomed (4) and Nilratan Mandal v. Ismail Khan Mahomed (5). All these cases were decided upon their own facts and circumstances and are quite different from the present case.

In the view we take of the nature of the appellant's tenure, we cannot say that the compensation awarded him by the court below was erroneous. It has been contended that the judgment of the court below and the decree founded thereon are bad because the judgment was written by Mr. Tute after he had ceased to be the District Judge of Allahabad. The judgment, no doubt, was so written and it was delivered by his successor. We think the mere fact that Mr. Tute had ceased to be the District Judge, when he wrote the judgment, is not sufficient to vitiate the judgment. Order XX, rule 2, provides that a Judge may pronounce a judgment written but not pronounced by his predecessor. In the Full Bench case of Satyendra Nath Ray Chaudhuri v. Kastura Kumari Ghatwalin (1) the Calcutta High Court held that a judgment written ten months after the Judge had ceased to have jurisdiction in the particular division was good and fulfilled the conditions of the corresponding section of the Code of Civil Procedure then in force.

It has been further argued that the award is without jurisdiction because Government claimed an interest in the property as well as the appellant. We do not think that there is any force in this contention. It can hardly be said that if land was in the occupation of a lessee under a lease from Government for fifty years, ten years of which had expired when the property was wanted for some public purpose, the property could not be acquired upon payment of compensation to the lessee for his interest in the unexpired term. If this be so, there is no difference in principle in the present case. If the appellant's interest is that of a tenant from year to year, he is entitled to compensation for the period that could elapse before he could be turned out and also for reasonable compensation for the buildings which are situate on the land.

In our opinion the appeal fails, and we accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[1st April, 1913.]

Act No. IX of 1872 (Indian Contract Act,) section 11—Minor—Sale—Minor vendee subsequently dispossessed by third party—Right of vendee to recover purchase money from vendor.

Where certain zamindari property was sold to persons who were minors at the time of sale, and the purchasers were subsequently ousted on suit by third parties, it was held that the purchasers were at any rate entitled to recover from the vendors the sum which they had paid as purchase money Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Muhomed Chowdhuri (1) and Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (2) distinguished.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

The respondent sold certain zamindari property to the plaintiffs appellants and received Rs. 800, the sale price. The vendees were minors at the time. At the date of the sale, the respondent had no subsisting title to the property. The true owners of the property brought a suit for cancellation of the sale deed and for recovery of possession. The suit was decreed, and the property thus passed out of the plaintiff's possession. The plaintiffs then brought the present suit against the respondent for refund, " under the terms of the sale-deed and also under the law," of Rs. 800, together with interest, and for the costs incurred by them in defending the former suit. The Munsif decreed the suit in full, except for a reduction of the amount claimed as interest. On appeal the District Judge, holding that the sale transaction was void on account of the vendees' minority, dismissed the suit entirely. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the appellants :—

The lower appellate court has dismissed the suit on the authority of the ruling in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (1). That case is distinguishable. There, the suit was for specific performance of the contract to sell. Here the sale had taken place, consideration had passed and possession had been delivered. The contract has been executed and the matter has passed beyond the domain of mere agreement. There is a fundamental distinction between a contract and a conveyance, and the [371] rights of parties to the two transcations are quite different; Kashik Lal v. Ram Narain (2). A transfer in favour of a minor was upheld in the case of Meghan Dube v. Pran Singh (3). In that case, no doubt, the minor was not the sole mortgagee; but he was at least one of the mortgagees. After the sale had taken place the plaintiffs were deprived of the property by reason of defect in their vendor's title. They are entitled to refund by the vendor of the puchase money. I rely on the principle of the ruling in Dattaram Govindbhai v. Vinayak Balakrishna (4). The plaintiffs are seeking a refund of the purchase money, not on the ground that they were minors at the date of the sale, but on the ground that the puchased property has passed out of their hands through the fault of their vendor. The vendor fraudulently respresented himself to be the owner of the property to which he had no subsisting title. He cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own fraud. Therefore, apart from the warranty of title contained in the sale-deed, the plaintiffs are entitled to a refund on grounds of equity.

Munshi Gulzari Lal (with him Babu Satya Chandra Mukerji), for the respondent :—

The suit is based on a covenant of title contained in the sale deed. The ground of the suit is either this express contract or an implied contract of covenant of title. The plaintiffs were minors when this contract was made and the question is whether they can enforce it. As has been laid down in the case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (5), a contract with a minor is absoultely void and unenforceable. Even if it be assumed that the minors were represented by a guardian during the negotiation relating to the sale, still, under the ruling of the Privy Council in 9 A.L.J., cited above, the minors cannot enforce the contract. Then, a sale necessarily involves the idea of a contract. It presupposes a previous mutual agreement and consequently a sale to a minor is void; Navakoti Narayana Chetti v. Loyalinga Chetty (6). As to the contention that the respondent's conduct amounted to a fraud, there was neither any allegation of fraud nor have the [372] courts arrived at any finding on this point. The suit is not based on tort but upon the agreement in the sale deed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, replied.

GRIFFIN and RYVES, JJ.—On the 17th of November, 1905, the defendant Janak Singh sold certain zamindari property to the plaintiffs, who were then minors. On a suit by third parties the plaintiffs were dispossessed. The plaintiffs, having been unable to obtain a refund of the purchase money from the defendant, brought this suit for its recovery and also for the costs incurred in the litigation with the third parties. In defence it was pleaded inter alia, that the contract was null and void, the plaintiffs having been minors at the date of the execution of the sale deed. The first court decreed the suit in part, namely, for the principal of the sale consideration Rs. 800; Rs. 119 in respect of the costs in the former litigation, and Rs. 260 as interest on the purchase money at 8 annas per cent. per mensem. The defendant appealed, eight grounds being taken in the memorandum of appeal. The lower appellate court disposed of the appeal on one ground only. In the opinion of that court the case was concluded by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri(1). We think it desirable to set out exactly what was decided by their Lordships in that case, inasmuch as the report of the case, as it appears in the Allahabad Law Journal, is not quite correct (2). Their Lordships state:—" Without some authority their Lordships are unable to accept the view of the learned Judges of the Division Bench that there is no difference between the position and powers of a manager and those of a guardian. They are, however, of opinion that it is not within the competence of a manager of a minor's estate or within the competence of guardian of a minor to bind the minor or of the minor's estate by a contract for the purchase of immovable property, and they are further of opinion that as the minor in the present case was not bound by the contract there was no mutuality, and that the minor, who has now reached his majority, cannot obtain specific performance of the contract " The lower appellate court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The [373] plaintiffs come here in second appeal. Various grounds have been pressed before us. It appears to us that the decision of the Privy Council referred to above, and the decision in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (3) do not support the decision arrived by the court below. In the latter case it was decided that a money-lender, who had advanced money to a minor on the security of a mortgage, could not enforce the mortgage against the minor, and their Lordships held that justice did not require an order for the return of the money advanced to him with full knowledge of his infancy. We must draw a distinction between the facts which were before their Lordships in Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (1) and the facts of the present case. In the case before their Lordships, they had to deal with an agreement to sell. Here we have before us a contract which has been executed. The sale has actually taken place. The plaintiffs have paid the consideration money. They obtained possession of the property, but were subsequently dispossessed. It cannot be said that in the altered state of affairs which has arisen since the deed of sale, the plaintiffs have not acquired a good cause of action for recovery of the purchase money. So far as the case has been argued before us, we are unable to see any reason why the plaintiffs should be debarred from recovering from the defendant the purchase money which the latter received from them as consideration for the property to which, it has been found, he had no title. It would, it appears to us, be highly inequitable to allow the defendant to retain the plaintiffs' money in his possession, and to hold that the plaintiffs could not recover from the defendant simply because they happened to be minors at the date of the sale. It is quite possible that the transaction might have been of such a nature that the defendant made himself liable under the criminal law for cheating, and it would be strange indeed that a vendor, who might have been held guilty of an offence of cheating, should not be held liable to refund to the plaintiffs the money out of which they have been defrauded. The court below decided the case on a preliminary point, and, as we are unable to agree with the decision, we allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and remand the case to that court with directions to readmit the [374] appeal to its original number in the register and dispose of it according to law. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

Criminal Procedure Code, sections 517 and 520—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Power of appellate Court to pass orders regarding property in respect of which an offence has been committed.

Held that section 520 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives to an appellate Court the same power as the court which originally tried a case to pass orders under section 517 of the Code. Baloram Gogai v. Chintaram Kohta (1) followed. In re Devidin Durgaprasad (2) distinguished.

IN this case two persons named Azmat Shah and Krishnanand were given licences to manufacture katha (catechu) in a village and both of them put down pits for that purpose. There was a dispute between the two as regards the katha manufactured and Azmat Shah forcibly took possession of it from Krishnanand and in doing so caused wrongful restraint to certain persons who were opposed to his doing so. Azmat Shah and some others were convicted by the court of Assistant Sessions Judge of Bareilly and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment each. On appeal to the Court of the Sessions Judge the conviction was upheld but the sentences passed were reduced. The appellate court further ordered that as it was not satisfied that the whole of the katha recovered was that taken from Krishnanand, the parties were to be left to establish their claims to it in the Civil Court. The accused applied to the High Court in revision.

Mr. Hamilton has argued that the concluding words of the appellate court's order are ultra vires. The learned Sessions Judge says:—"I am not satisfied that the whole of the katha (catechu) recovered was that taken from Krishnanand and the parties will be left to establish their claim to it in the Civil Court." It is argued that under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code the only court that could pass orders under that section was the court trying the case, and reliance is placed on In re Devidin Durgaprasad (1). This decision, however, was passed before the present Code of Criminal Procedure came into force. It seems to me that section 520 gives an appellate court full power to pass such an order. The same view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in Baloram Gogai v. Chintaram Kohta (2).

Act (Local) No. I of 1900 (United Provinces Municipalities Act), section 88—Municipal Board—Power of Board to order demolition of structure overhanging a public road—Compensation—Offer to pay compensation not a condition precedent to order for demolition.

The owner of a house to which was attached a balcony overhanging a public road repaired the balcony, which had become dilapidated, and made it serviceable, but without obtaining the permission of the Municipal Board thereto.

The board thereupon issued notice to the house-owner under section 88 of the Municipalities Act, 1900, to remove the balcony, and, in default of compliance prosecuted him.

Held that the board had power, under section 88, clause (2) of the said Act, to order the removal of the balcony without assigning any reason, and that it was not necessary for the board, in the case of a notice issued under section 88, to tender or express its willingness to pay compensation in respect of the structure the demolition of which was ordered.

[Ref. 73 I. C. 813=4 Lah. 158.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

One Nanna Mal was the owner of a house in the town of Hathras. There was a balcony attached to this house overhanging a [376] public road. It fell into disrepair and the applicant reconstructed it and made it serviceable. He also had a privy in this house, the upper portion of the screening wall of which fell down. He accordingly rebuilt this wall so as to screen the privy from the public gaze. He acted, in both instances, without any sanction from the Municipal Board. notice shows, under section 91, clause (1), and section 88 of the Municipalities Act, and ordered him to remove both the privy and the verandah. He did not comply with the order, and was prosecuted and convicted of an offence under section 147 of the Municipalities Act, and has been fined Rs. 20. In the meantime he also brought a civil suit for a declaration that the notice issued by the Municipal Board was ultra vires and that he was not bound by it. The suit partly succeeded and partly failed. In so far as the notice under section 91 is concerned, which relates to the privy, the suit was decreed. In so far as the balcony was concerned, the suit was dismissed.

Against his conviction and sentence Nanna Mal applied in revision to the High Court.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

TUDBALL, J:—The facts out of which this revision has arisen are as follows. The applicant is the owner of a house in the town of Hathras. There was a balcony attached to this house overhanging a public road. It fell into disrepair and the applicant reconstructed it and made it serviceable. He also had a privy in this house, the upper portion of the screening wall of which fell down. He accordingly rebuilt this wall so as to screen the privy from the public gaze. He acted, in both instances, without any sanction from the Municipal Board. On the 22nd of July, 1911, the Board issued a notice to the applicant, as the heading of the notice shows, under section 91, clause (1), and section 88 of the Municipalities Act and ordered him to remove both the privy and the balcony. He did not comply with the order and was prosecuted and convicted of an offence under section 147 of the Municipalities Act and has been fined Rs. 20. In the meantime he also brought a civil suit for a declaration that the notice issued by the Municipal Board [377] was ultra vires and that he was not bound by it. The suit partly succeeded and partly failed. In so far as the notice under section 91 is concerned, which relates to the privy, the suit was decreed. In so far as the balcony was concerned the suit was dismissed. The question now before me is whether the applicant should have been found guilty of an offence under section 147 of the Act.

Taking first the case of the privy, it is quite clear that section 91, clause (1) or (2), could not apply to the facts of the present case. Under clause (1) the notice contemplated is one requiring the owner or occupier of any building or land to repair, alter, cleanse, disinfect or put in good order or to close any drain, privy or cess-pool. Clause (2) of the section relates really to a new privy built without permission or contrary to directions or regulations or the provisions of the Act or the rebuilding of any privy which the Board had ordered to be demolished or closed or not to be made. It is, therefore, quite clear that section 91 has really no application to the fact of this case and has wrongly been applied by the Board.

As regards the balcony, section 88 is the section under which the Board issued the notice. It must also be noted here that the Board took no action under section 87 of the Act. The notice was issued under section 88. Clause (1) of that section lays down that it shall not be lawful without the written permission of the Board to add to or place against or in front of any building any projection or structure overhanging, projecting into or encroaching on any street. Clause (2) then goes on to say that the Board may, by notice, require the owner or occupier of any building to remove or alter any projection or structure. To this clause there was a proviso that in the case of any such projection which was lawfully in existence at the commencement of the Act, the Board shall make reasonable compensation for any damage caused by the removal. There is nothing in the section limiting the right of the Board to issue the notice contemplated in clause (2) to cases in which the structure is dangerous to the public or insanitary or to cases of a similar nature. Apparently the Board has unlimited power, without assigning any reason, to issue the notice contemplated in clause (2). The proviso merely lays down that in certain cases the Board shall compensate the owner of the structure. [378] It is urged on behalf of the applicant that the Board should, in its notice, either tender compensation or at least express its willingness to pay compensation. It seems to me impossible to hold that the Board must do this. It is only in cases of projections lawfully in existence at the commencement of the Act that the Board is bound to pay compensation. It might be, in a special case, that the Board denied that the structure was one such as to entitle the owner to the compensation mentioned in the proviso. It would be absurd to hold that the Board in such a case could not order the removal of a structure until the question of compensation had been settled. In the circumstances of the present case it was the duty of the present applicant to comply with the order of the Board, at the same time putting forward his claim for compensation. If the Board wrongly refused to pay what was due to him it would have been open to him to recover the amount in a legal manner. Under the notice issued, therefore, in so far as the balcony was concerned, the present applicant was wrong in not complying with the order. He has, therefore, been guilty of an offence under section 147 of the Act, and the conviction was according to law. The application, therefore, fails and is rejected.

Application rejected.

limitation, applying the second paragraph of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. On appeal the District Judge came to the conclusion that the word "interest" in section 20 meant the whole of the interest due on a debt, and that, therefore, as only part of the interest was paid on any particular date, section 20 could not be prayed in aid. Maulvi Muhammad Rahmat-ullah, for the appellants.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondents.

RYVES and LYLE, JJ:—The only point in this case is as to whether the suit is barred by limitation. The suit is one for foreclosure of a mortgage, dated the 4th of December, 1874. The mortgagee, was in possession and received periodically profits in part satisfaction of the interest agreed upon in the deed. The first court held that these payments extended the period of limitation, applying the second paragraph of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act. On appeal, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the word "interest" in section 20 means the whole of the interest due on a debt and that, therefore, as only part of the interest was paid on any particular date, held that section 20 had no application, and dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. In our opinion "interest" in that section means the interest or any part of the interest due, and we agree with the first court that the suit is not barred by limitation. The rulings to which we have been referred [Kallu v. Halki (1) Anwar Husain v. Lalmir Khan (2)] are cases of redemption of a mortgage. The latter case expressly distinguishes a suit for redemption from a suit brought by a mortgagee to enforce his remedy. We, therefore, allow the appeal, and, setting aside the decree of the lower appellate court, remand the appeal to that court with directions to readmit it on its original number in the register and dispose of the remaining issues according to law. The costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
35 A. 380=19 I. C. 645=11 A. L. J. 463

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

On the 9th of October, 1890, Bisheshar Sahu, father of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, got a decree against one Bhawani Din for sale of certain share in certain properties, Bhawani Din (after the decree had been passed) sold the property to the plaintiffs and left Rs. 770, the amount due on the above decree, in the plaintiffs' hands for payment to the decree-holder.

Bisheshar died in 1892, leaving three sons Ram Sarup, Beni Madho and Chunni. Ram Sarup the eldest son, defendant No. 1, applied for execution of the decree, in 1893, and again in 1896. Both applications were struck off for want of prosecution, the second on the 31st of March, 1897, on which date the decretal money was paid to Ram Sarup, and he applied, under section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and the full satisfaction of the decree was accordingly certified. After this, 13 years passed, and then Beni Madho and Chunni, brothers of Ram Sarup, defendants 2 and 3, applied to execute the same decree by sale of the property. They did not make the plaintiffs parties to these execution proceedings, but brought on the record Somai Ahir, defendant No. 4, as representative of Bhawani Din, judgment-debtor. Somai Ahir made an objection that the application was time-barred and that the decree had been satisfied. The plaintiffs also put in an application to the same effect, but it was rejected. Somai Ahir's objection was also dismissed, without the court going into the question as to whether the decree had been satisfied, and the property was ordered to be sold.

[381] The plaintiffs then brought the present suit for a declaration that the property could not be sold in execution of the decree. The Munsiff held:—

(1) that the defendants 1, 2 and 3 formed a joint Hindu family and Ram Sarup defendant No. 1 was the manager;

(2) that the entire joint family was as much benefited by the realization of the decretal amount as defendant No. 1;

(3) that it was neither proved nor alleged that defendant No. 1 misappropriated the sum;

(4) that there had been collusion between the decree-holders and the judgment-debtor;

(5) that defendants 2 and 3 were 33 and 25 years of age respectively. The application for execution made in 1910, was made three years after their attaining majority.

He accordingly decreed the suit.

On appeal, the District Judge observed:—"There is no question of fact but there are several difficult points of law," and he found as follows:—

(1) that the payment to Ram Sarup did not discharge the decree;

(2) that section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code barred the suit;

(3) that the decision of the question of limitation was barred by the principle of res judicata;

(4) that the decision of the Munsif, dated the 30th of May, 1911, was binding on the plaintiffs.

He therefore reversed the Munsif's decision and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Iswar Saran, on behalf of the plaintiffs appellants, submitted that the position of the manager of a joint Hindu family was peculiar and he enjoyed extensive rights. He represented the entire family in transactions with the outside world. He could make and receive payments on behalf of the whole family. He relied on the Full Bench case of Hori Lal v. Munman Kunwar (1). He contended that section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not bar the suit as the decree had been fully satisfied. He referred to Har Prasad v. Sheo Ram (2). He further submitted [382] that, according to section 47, the court had full discretion to treat the plaint as an application in execution. As regards the questions of limitation and res judicata, he contended that no order passed in any proceedings to which the plaintiffs were no parties, against the original judgment-debtor, would be binding on his clients, as the original judgment-debtor's interest in the matter completely ceased after the sale to the plaintiffs and the latter could not be said to be the representatives of the former.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri, (for Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji) for the respondents, contended that the District Judge had not distinctly found that Ram Sarup was the manager of the family. He pressed for a finding on the point. If Ram Sarup was not the manager, he could not give a valid discharge without the concurrence of his other brothers. He submitted that the discretion mentioned in section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code could only be exercised in favour of a decree-holder who instituted the suit. He further submitted that all orders passed against the original judgment-debtors were binding on the appellants as they purchased the property after the decree. He referred to section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. He also relied on Ganga Dayal v. Mani Ram (3) and Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (4).

Munshi Iswar Saran was heard in reply.

RYVES and LYLE JJ.:—Bisheshar Sahu, father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 obtained a decree for sale on a mortgage of certain property on the 9th of October, 1890. Bhawani Din, the mortgagor, judgment-debtor, after the decree, sold his equity of redemption to the plaintiff and left Rs. 770 with him out of the consideration money to pay off the mortgage decree. Bisheshar Sahu died, leaving three sons, namely, Ram Sarup, Beni Madho and Chunni. Ram Sarup was an adult and the two younger brothers were minors. After two infructuous applications to execute the decree, the plaintiff paid off the amount of the mortgage to Ram Sarup, and Ram Sarup applied, under section 258 of the old Civil Procedure Code, to have the satisfaction of the decree certified by the court, and this was done on the 31st of March, 1897.

Thirteen years afterwards Beni Madho and Chunni applied to execute the same decree by sale of the property. The plaintiff, [383] who alone had any interest in the property, was not made a party to these proceedings.

One Somai Ahir was brought on the record as a legal representative of Bhawani Din, the mortgagor judgment-debtor. The court executing the decree found that Beni Madho and Chunni had made their application within three years of attaining majority, and ordered the property to be sold, and sent the papers to the Collector for compliance. When the sale notification was issued, the plaintiff first became aware of what had been done. He applied to the Collector, objecting to the sale on the ground that the decree had been already executed; his application, however, was dismissed, on the ground that he was no party to the decree. Hence this suit.

The Munsif found (1) that the three brothers, Ram Sarup, Beni Madho and Chunni, formed a joint Hindu family and that Ram Sarup was the manager, (2) that the joint family was benefited by the payment of the mortgage money, (3) that it was neither alleged nor proved that Ram Sarup had misappropriated the money. He also held that Ram Sarup, as manager of the family, was legally entitled to accept payment and enter satisfaction of the decree, and that his act bound the joint family. He decreed the suit.

On appeal before the learned District Judge no question of fact was raised. Various legal pleas were taken, only one of which, however, is now in question in this appeal, and that is, whether the managing member of a joint Hindu family can have satisfaction of a decree recorded, so as to bind the other members of the joint family. The learned Judge says :— "I accept the finding of the lower court that Ram Sarup and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were members of a joint Hindu family. The lower court has found that the head of Hindu family can enter satisfaction of a decree against himself and other members of the family. I am unable to agree." This decision of the learned District Judge was given on the 17th of June, 1912, i.e., before the judgment of the Full Bench in Hori Lal v. Munman Kunwar (1) had been published.

It seems to us that that decision concludes the question and is full authority for holding that the managing member of a joint [384] Hindu family can execute decrees, on behalf of the family, and can receive payment and give good receipts, on behalf of the family, which are binding on the family. It is argued before us that the three brothers were joint decree-holders and that satisfaction entered by one could not bind the others, and reliance was placed on the case of Ganga Dayal v. Mani Ram(1). That case was decided before the Full Bench case, and in any event is distinguishable from the present case, because it is stated on page 160 of the report :—" It is further argued in the present case that plaintiff No. 1 must be deemed to be the managing member of the family, who would have a right to give a discharge. The powers of the manager of a Hindu family are undoubtedly very extensive, but there is nothing in the present case to show that the plaintiff No. 1 ever acted as the manager."

It is conceded by the learned vakil for the respondent, that if in our opinion the lower court has come to a definite finding that Ram Sarup was the managing member of the family then the reasons given by the learned District Judge for dismissing the suit could not be supported, and this is obviously so, for if Ram Sarup was the manager of the family and as such received payment in full of the decree held by the joint family, and had satisfaction of the decree certified by the court executing it, then the decree was completely discharged and could not possibly be executed again. We have no hesitation in holding that the District Judge concurred with the Munsif and did find that Ram Sarup was the manager of the joint family of which he and his two brothers were the members.

In the court of the Munsif, Beni Madho and Chunni had denied that Ram Sarup was the manager of the family. They alleged that he had separated from them. On the evidence before him the learned Munsif came to a very distinct finding, as mentioned in the beginning of our judgment. In the grounds of appeal before the District Judge, no specific objection was taken to this finding, and the Judge himself states that no question of fact was raised before him, and he accepted the findings of Pre-emption—Subject matter of suit re-sold at advanced price—Second sale subject to right of pre-emption in respect of the first.

A house in the city of Benares subject to a customary right of pre-emption was sold for Rs. 1,150. The vendee resold it shortly afterwards to the defendant for Rs. 4,000. Held on suit brought to pre-empt the property at the original price of Rs. 1,150, that the second sale was subject to the right of pre-emption and the pre-emptor was only bound to pre-empt the first sale, making the subsequent vendee a party to the suit so as to bind him by the proceedings. Kamta Prasad v. Mohan Bhagat (1) referred to.

[Ref. 79 I. C. 1053=22 A. L. J. 817.]

THIS was a suit for possession by right of pre-emption of a house in the city of Benares. The sale sought to be pre-empted was for Rs. 1,150. The purchaser (defendant No. 2) sold the same property subsequently for Rs. 4,000 to defendant No. 3. The plaintiff offered to pay only Rs. 1,150. The court of first instance decreed the claim. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the decree. The defendant appealed.

Munshi Purshottam Das Tandan, for the appellant.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J. and TUDBALL, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The premises are situate in the city of Benares. A number of issues were framed in the court below; amongst others, one as to whether the custom prevailed in the particular muhalla where the premises were situate. Another issue was whether the demands were made in accordance with the Muhammadan Law. On the first question, it has not been shown to us that the decision of the court below was wrong. There was undoubtedly evidence of the existence of the custom and in conjunction with that evidence the court was clearly entitled to take into consideration that pre-emption is common in a number of the [386] muhallas into which the city Benares is divided. On the whole, we see no reason to differ from the view of both the courts below on this point.

With regard to the making of the demands, this is really a question of fact in the present case. It is not alleged that the demands were made in any improper form, or that the words used were not sufficient. The only question which has been urged here is whether or not the plaintiff made the demand immediately after hearing of the sale. This is a pure question of fact and is concluded by the finding of the courts below.

The last question which has been argued in the present appeal is the question of price. It appears that the property was first sold in September 1908. At that time registration had to be obtained compulsorily and the court below found that the vendee did not obtain actual possession until a period which rendered the present suit not barred by limitation. But it appears that after the last vendee had obtained possession and cut down a peepul tree, the property was resold to the present appellant at about four times the original price. The court of first instance threw some doubt upon the bona fides of this sale, but the lower appellate court considered this question immaterial and dealt with the case upon the assumption that the sale was bona fide. In our opinion, the second sale must be taken to have been made subject to the right of pre-emption and the plaintiff was only bound to pre-empt the first sale, making, of course, the subsequent vendee a party to the suit so as to bind him by the proceedings. This was the view taken by a Bench of this Court in Kamta Prasad v. Mohan Bhagat (1).

The result is that the appeal fails on all points and is dismissed with costs.

Mortgagee rights merely in a revenue-paying mahal do not fall within the purview of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, for the purposes of partition : consequently the provisions of the Partition Act, 1893, apply to the partition amongst co-owners of such rights. But an order for sale of the mortgagee rights under section 2 of the Partition Act will not be valid unless based upon the request of a party or parties interested to the extent of one moiety or upwards.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

In a suit for partition a preliminary decree was passed, and for the purpose of preparing a final decee the court appointed a commissioner and a receiver. Amongst the properties the subject of the partition were the mortgagee rights in one half of a village called Sundhawra. One of the defendants in the partition suit applied to the court apparently under section 2 of the Partition Act, 1893, praying that the mortgagee rights might be sold by auction to the highest bidder among the parties. The interest of the applicant however, amounted to only one-quarter of the said rights. The application was opposed by other parties to the partition proceedings: but after calling for a report from the receiver, the court passed an order directing the sale of the mortgagee rights to the highest bidder amongst the co-sharers. Against this order the two opposing defendants appealed to the High Court.

BANERJI and RYVES, JJ:—Banwari Lal, Parsotam Das and Ramrich Pal brought a suit for partition of their shares in certain joint property. A preliminary decree was passed in that suit, and for the purpose of preparing a final decree the court appointed a commissioner and receiver. Among the properties ordered to be partitioned are mortgagee rights in one half of the village Sundhawra. On the 15th of May, 1912, Shanti Prasad, who was one of the defendants, and the extent of whose share, as also the share of his minor brother Ram Kunwar, is one quarter, applied to [388] the court, apparently under Act IV of 1893, praying that the motgagee rights be sold by auction to the highest bidder among the parties. This application was opposed by Banke Lal and Ratan Lal. On reference by the court to the receiver and on obtaining a report from him, the court made an order directing the sale of the mortgagee rights to the highest bidder among the co-sharers. The present appeal has been preferred against this order and it is contended that the partition Act (No. IV of 1893) does not apply to a case like this, inasmuch as the property in question is property paying revenue to Government. Clause (4) of section 1 of the Act is referred to in support of this contention. That clause provides that nothing contained in the Act shall be deemed to affect any local law providing for the partition of immovable property paying revenue to Government. Partition of immovable property paying revenue to Government in these provinces is to be effected under the provisions of the Land Revenue Act, No. III of 1901. Under that Act, separate mahals cannot be formed of mortgagee rights as between the holders of a mortgage. The partition contemplated by that Act is a partition of zamindari rights, and if partition is sougut of zamindari rights in respect of property which is under a mortgage, as against other co-sharers of the zamindari rights, the application for partition should, as required by section 107 of the Act, be made by the mortgagor and the mortgagee jointly. In our opinion that Act has no application to a case like this. Under Act IV of 1893, at the request of share-holders interested individually or collectively to the extent of one moiety or upwards, the Court may direct a sale of the property ordered to be partitioned and distribution of the proceeds, and where such an order is made, any of the parties other than the applicant may apply for leave to buy at a valuation the share or shares of the party or parties asking for sale. In the present case Shanti Prasad and his brother who applied for sale of the mortgagee rights were share-holders only of one-fourth and not of a moiety. Therefore they alone could not ask the court to sell the mortgagee rights. Other share-holders may have expressed their consent to the sale of the mortgagee rights. But they made no request to the court in that behalf. Therefore, it seems to us, that the court was not competent to take action under section 2 of the Act. If action has been taken under that section, and the court had decided [389] that the property ought to be sold, the share-holders other than the applicant could under section 3, have applied for a valuation and the court in that case should have ordered a valuation to be made. Neither of these proceedings appears to have been taken. There being no application either under section 2 or under section 3, the court was not competent to make the order passed by it. We must, therefore, set aside its order of the 16th of May, 1912. It will be open to the parties or such of them as may choose to do so, to ask the court to take action under section 2, and in that case, it will be open to other share-holders to apply under section 3, and if such applications be made, it will be the duty of the court to proceed under the provisions of sections 2 and 3. The order complained of is an illegal order. We accordingly allow the appeal, and set aside that order. Under the circumstances we direct the parties to pay their own costs in both courts.

Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule I, article 128—Execution of decree—Limitation—Step in aid of execution—Application for transfer of decree—Civil Procedure Code (1882), section, 223.

Held, that an application made to the court passing a decree to transfer it for execution to another court is an application to take a step in aid of execution within the meaning of article 182 of the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Chanaru Nath Gossami v. Gurroo Prosunno Ghose (1) followed.

The facts of this case were as follows :—

A preliminary decree for sale was passed on the 1st of September 1897, and it was made absolute on the 17th of November, 1900. The last application for execution, admittedly within time, was made on the 11th of May, 1906. On the 5th of September, 1908, the decree-holder applied to the court at Bareilly, which had passed the decree, to transfer it for execution to the court at Shahjahanpur. This application was made under section 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. The certificate asked for was granted, and thereupon an application for execution was made in the court at Shahjahanpur on the 8th of February, 1910.

[390] The judgment-debtors took objection that execution of the decree was time-barred. This objection was disallowed by the executing court, and the judgment-debtors thereupon appealed to the High Court.

BANERJI and RYVES JJ. :—This appeal arises out of an application for the execution of a decree, and the question to be determined is whether the application is time-barred. A preliminary decree for sale was passed on the 1st of September, 1897, and it was made absolute on the 17th of November, 1900. for execution was made in the court at Shahjahanpur on the 8th of February, 1910. It is this application which the appellants contend is time-barred. The court below has held against the appellants, and in our judgment its decision is right. The present application for execution would be within time if the application of the 5th of September, 1908, was one to take a step in aid of execution, within the meaning of article 182, schedule I of the Limitation Act. No application for execution could be made in a district outside the jurisdiction of the court which passed the decree unless that court made an order transferring the decree for execution. An application for transfer of the decree is, therefore, an essential and necessary step preliminary to the making of an application for execution in a court which is not the court which passed the decree. Such an application is clearly an application to take a step in aid of execution. This was so held by the Calcutta High Court in Chundra Nath Gossami v. Gurroo Prosunno Ghose (1), and we agree with that ruling. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal and cross appeal consolidated.

[15th and 16th April and 10th June, 1913.]

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, at Lucknow.]

Act No. I of 1869 (Oudh Estates Act), sections 2, 3, 8, 10 and 22—Summary and regular settlements of Oudh—Villages settled on grantee whose name was entered as owner in Lists 1 and 2 of those prepared under section 8—"Taluqdar"—"Estate" under section 2—Impartible property—Kabuliat executed by grantee after the time limit specified in section 3—Suit for partition—After-acquired properties held to be partible, there being no intention shown to incorporate them with the impartible property.

At the summary settlement of Oudh an order was made on the 5th of October, 1859, for the settlement of certain villages with the ancestor of the parties to these appeals, who, however, did not execute his kabuliat until the 13th of October, 1859, and so not within the time limit specified in section 3 of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), namely "between the 1st of April, 1858, and the 10th of October, 1859." At the regular settlement, shortly afterwards, the grantee recovered decrees for possession of other villages; and subsequently acquired other properties by purchase. In respect of all the settled villages his name was entered in Lists 1 and 2 prepared under the statutory provisions of section 8 of the Act. In a suit for partition to which the defence was that all the property was impartible, Held (affirming the decisions of the Courts in India) that the grantee (the defendant) was, on the construction of the provisions of Act I of 1869 relating thereto, a "taluqdar," and the villages so settled with him formed, within the meaning of the Act, an "estate" which was impartible and descendible to a single heir.

On a question whether the delay in executing the kabuliat deprived the taluqa of the character of an "estate" defined in section 2 of the Act, the Judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court differed in opinion.

* Present :—Lord SHAW, Lord MOULTON, Sir JOHN EDGE, and Mr. AMEER ALI.

(1) (1895) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 375.

Held, in the absence of an express declaration that non-execution within the time specified would be fatal to the right given to the grantee by section 3, that no such construction could be put on that section; but the execution of the kabuliat related back to the date of the settlement, namely the 5th of October, 1859.

As to the after-acquired properties the defendant contended that by the custom of the family they became part of the original estate and were therefore not subject to the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance.

Held (affirming the decisions of both courts below) that the evidence was insufficient to establish that custom; that no intention of the taluqdar was shown to incorporate the subsequently acquired properties with the taluqa, as [392] was necessary on the authority of the case of Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jagadis Chunder Dhabal (1); and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to a decree for his share (one half) of such properties as being partible.

APPEAL (116 of 1911) and cross appeal (117 of 1911) consolidated, from a judgment and decree (8th September, 1909) of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which affirmed with slight variation the decree (15th September, 1908) of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki.

The suit which gave rise to these appeals was instituted by Dwarka Prasad Singh for partition of certain properties in the possession of his brother the first defendant Janki Prasad Singh, claiming that such properties constituted ancestral estate of the family partible between them. The defence of Janki Prasad Singh was that the "properties in suit were impartible, and that no partition can be or ever has been made in this family in accordance with the prevailing custom" which obtained from ancient times. The first defendant had died and was now represented by Dharaband Singh his minor son, who appeared by his guardian the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki as representing the Court of Wards. The second defendant Marjad Kuar (the mother of the plaintiff and of the first defendant) was also dead, and no question now remained as to her interest in the properties in suit.

The following extract from the family pedigree shows the relationship of the parties, and explains the history of the litigation which is stated in their Lordships' judgment, together with the relevant sections of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869).

[393] The main questions for determination in these appeals were whether the properties in suit were impartible, and whether, they devolved on a single heir under the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869).

The history of the family showed that certain of the villages of which the properties in suit consisted had been settled upon Autar Singh, an ancestor of the parties, at the Summary Settlement in 1859, and at the Regular Settlement shortly afterwards; and that other properties had been subsequently acquired by him. As to the properties which had been settled, the Subordinate Judge held that they constituted an "estate" within the meaning of section 2 of Act I of 1869, and were consequently impartible and devolved by family custom on a single heir; but as to the after-acquired properties he held that they were joint and partible; and he gave the plaintiff a decree for partition, and delivery of possession of a one-third share in them, dismissing the suit as to the settled portion of the properties.

From that decision both parties appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, the plaintiff asking for a half-share, as the second defendant had died.

The Appellate Court consisted of Pandit SUNDAR LAL (1st Additional Judicial Commissioner) and Mr. PIGGOTT (2nd Additional Judicial Commissioner), who affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, except that they gave the plaintiff a half share instead of a one-third share in the after-acquired properties. On the question whether the settled properties did or did not form a taluqdari estate within the meaning of Act I of 1869, the Judges differed in opinion, Pandit SUNDAR LAL holding that the Summary Settlement of the villages in 1859 not having been concluded before the 10th of October (certain formalities being only carried out on the 13th of October, 1859, those villages did not form part of an "estate" as defined in section 2 of Act I of 1869, and that the succession to them was consequently not governed by the provisions of that Act: and Mr. PIGGOTT holding that the settlement ought to be presumed to have been made on the 5th of October, 1859, when the Commissioner had made an order that the villages should be "settled."

[394] Both appeals were dismissed with costs by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner: and both parties appealed to His Majesty in Council, the defendant's appeal being 116 of 1911 and the plaintiff's 117 of 1911.

On these appeals—

Sir H. Erle Richards, K. C., and Kenworthy Brown for the defendant contended that the villages originally settled at the summary and regular settlements formed an estate within the meaning of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), and did not lose the character of an "estate" under that Act, by reason of the execution of the kabuliat not having been made by Autar Singh within the period mentioned in section 3, and reference was made to sections 2, 3, 8 and 10 of that Act, and Sykes' Talqudari Law, pages 378, 389 and 392 with regard to the Lists of Talqudars whose estates descended according to the custom of impartibility. That custom, it was contended, had been established by the evidence and governed the succession of all the property in dispute; Act XVII of 1876 (Oudh Land Revenue Act), section 17, was referred to. If a custom of impartibility was shown to govern the originally settled property, as, it was submitted, had been done, the onus rested on those who alleged it to show with regard to the after-acquired property that it was partible, and not impar-

The Courts in India had erred in allowing the plaintiff to set up a new case not originally pleaded, namely, that all the properties in suit were not governed by the same law, and in giving him a decree for some of them on the footing that they were partible; and by reason of the fact that that case was not set up in the plaint, the defendant had no opportunity of showing that [395] the intention of the taluqdar was that the lands subsequently acquired should form part of the originally settled lands, and be governed by the same custom of impartibility. The plaintiff, it was submitted, was not entitled to any of the property as being partible, but his suit should have been wholly dismissed.

De Gruyther, K. C, and B. Dube for the plaintiff contended that the summary settlement in 1859 had not been made before the 13th of October 1859, when Autar Singh signed the kabuliat, which was not within the time limited by section 3 of Act I of 1869; and that the provisions of that Act were therefore not applicable. The property then settled was consequently not an "estate" under that Act, but was governed by the ordinary Hindu law of the Mitakshara, and was therefore partible. With respect to the after-acquired property, the Courts in India had found that it was not to be treated as being governed by the custom of impartibility set up by the defendant; and there was no condition in the grant which prohibited the partition of that property. There was moreover no intention by the taluqdar shown to incorporate the acquired property with that originally settled. [Lord SHAW referred a passage from the case of Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jagdis Chunder Dhabal (5) from page 453 of I. L. R. 29 Cal. lines 32 to 36]. share as a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law.

The two defendants to this action were the plaintiff's elder brother Janki Prasad and their mother Marjad Kuar, and as the mother, under ths Mitakshara Law, is entitled on the partition of ancestral property to an equal share with the sons for her life, the plaintiff asked for a decree in respect of a third share in the entire property included in the list attached to the plaint.

The defendant Janki Prasad alone contested the suit, the ground of his defence being that the taluqa sued for was, under the provisions of Act I of 1869, as also by custom governing the family, an impartible estate descendible to a single heir, to which the ordinary rules of the Hindu law of inheritance did not apply. The parties thus went to trial on two distinct issues, viz., whether the properties in suit belonged to a joint Hindu family and were subject to the incidents ordinarily attached to such properties, or whether they formed in whole or in part, under Act I of 1869 or by custom, an impartible estate.

A short history of the family will explain the reasons on which the Courts in India have proceeded in arriving at their conclusions. The nucleus of the taluqa in dispute is said to have been formed by one Suk Shah. He owned nine villages, but the number increased to sixteen in the hands of his son and successor, Sakat Singh, who lived about the close of the 18th century. In 1856, when the British first occupied the kingdom of Oudh, the taluqa included 21 villages, and was held by Autar Singh, eighth in descent from Gulal Shah, the original ancestor of the parties and the grand father of Suk Shah. On the outbreak of the Mutiny Autar is said to have disappeared. Nor did he make his appearance on Lord Canning's famous Proclamation issued in March, 1858. The British authorities accordingly proceeded to make a settlement of his confiscated villages with third parties. But some time in July, 1859 Autar appeared before the authorities explained the reason of his non-appearance before, and applied for a settlement of his villages. They were apparently satisfied with his explanation, and on the 5th of October, 1859, an order was passed [397] on his application, sanctioning the summary settlement with him of the remaining nine villages which had not been finally settled with others. The Kabuliat, however, was not signed by him until the 13th of that month.

In the course of the Regular Settlement which followed shortly after, Autar recovered decrees for possession of six more villages. He was thus in possession of some 15 villages when Act I of 1869 was passed into law. Later on he acquired by purchase several other properties.

Autar died in 1879 without issue and was succeeded in the possession of the properties by his nephew Jang Bahadur, the eldest son of his brother Bisheshur. Jang Bahadur died in 1889, leaving him surviving two sons, viz., the plaintiff and the defendant Janki Prasad, the latter being the eldest. On Jang Bahadur's death, Janki Prasad came into the possession of the entire property.

The Subordinate Judge has held that the properties which were settled with Autar in 1859, together with those decreed to him in the course of the regular settelement, form an "estate" within the meaning of Act I of 1869 and are descendible to a single heir and are consequently impartible. But as regards the several properties Autar Singh acquired by purchase subsequent to the regular settlement the Trial Judge was of opinion that in the absence of evidence establishing an intention on his part to incorporate the subsequent acquistions with the "estate," they must be held to be governed by the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim in respect of a one-third share in what he calls the " acquired " properties and dismissed the suit as regards the rest.

Both parties appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh which affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge with a modification in respect of the parties' shares necessitated by the death of their mother Marjad Kuar, which became one-half each instead of one-third.

The plaintiff and the defendant have both appealed to His Majesty in Council against the judgment and decree of the appellate court. The plaintiff contends that the lower courts are wrong in holding that the properties in respect of which his suit has been dismissed, form an "estate" within the meaning of [398] the Act, and are, consequently, impartible; whilst the defendant urges that the properties, a half share of which has been decreed to the plaintiff, being accretions to the " estate " or taluqa are equally impartible.

As regards the contention of the plaintiff, the first point to determine is the meaning which the Legislature has attached to the word " estate " with reference to properties coming within the purview of Act I of 1869, and that meaning must be gathered so far as possible from the enactment itself.

The term " estate " is defined in section 2 to mean " the taluqa or immovable property acquired or held by a taluqdar or grantee in the manner mentioned in section 3, section 4 or section 5, or the immovable property conferred by a special grant of the British Government upon a grantee." And " taluqdar " is declared to mean a person whose name is entered in the first of the lists mentioned in section 8.

Section 3 declares that :—

" Every taluqdar with whom a summary settlement of the Government revenue was made between the first day of April, 1858, and the tenth day of October, 1859, or to whom, before the passing of this Act and subsequently to the first day of April 1858 a taluqdari sanad has been granted, shall be deemed to have thereby acquired a permanent, heritable and transferable right in the estate comprising the villages and lands named in the list attached to the agreement of kabuliyat executed by such taluqdar when such settlement was made, or which may have been or may be decreed to him by the Court of an officer engaged in making the first regular settlement of the province of Oudh, such decree not having been appealed from within the time limited for appealing against it, or, if appealed from, having been affirmed."

Section 8 provides that :—

"Within six months after the passing of this Act, the Chief Commissioner of Oudh . . . shall cause to be prepared six lists, namely:—

" First.—A list of all persons who are to be considered tauqdars within the meaning of this Act.

"Second —A list of the taluqdars whose estates, according to the custom of the family on and before the thirteenth day of February, 1856, ordinarily, devolved upon a single heir."

The rest of the section is immaterial for the purposes of this case. Section 22 lays down the rules relating to intestate succession to the estates of taluqdars whose names have been entered in the second, third or fifth of the lists mentioned in section 8. In the first instance it declares that if any taluqdar whose name is so entered were to die intestate as to his estate, such estate shall [399] descend " to the eldest son of such taluqdar or grantee, heir or legatee, and his male lineal descendants, subject to the same conditions and in the same manner as the estate was held by the deceased."

It is common ground that "a summary settlement of the Government revenue" was made with Autar Singh in respect of nine villages "between the 1st day of April, 1858, and the 10th day of October, 1859." Their Lordships are not omitting from consideration the fact that the kabuliat was not executed until the 13th of October. To this they will advert later. It is also admitted that he obtained decrees in respect of six other villages in the first regular settlement of the Province, and that his name was entered in the Lists prepared under the statutory provisions of section 8. It is clear, therefore, that Autar was not only a taluqdar, but that his taluqa acquired by virtue of the above recited proceedings, was an "estate" within the meaning of the Act.

One of the learned Judges in the Court below has considered that the execution of the kabuliat after the time-limit mentioned in section 3, deprived Autar Singh's taluqa of the chararter of an estate defined in the Statute, although in his conclusion he agreed with the Subordinate Judge in holding that it was impartible property. His view may shortly be summarized as follows: as the principal villages included in the taluqa were not acquired either under a grant or a summary settlement made between the two dates mentioned in section 3, the property did not constitute an "estate" defined in section 2; but as it appeared in the evidence that the taluqa had ordinarily devolved upon a single heir on and before the 13th of February, 1856, it must be treated as an impartible estate descendible under the rules of devolution provided in section 22.

The other learned Judge held in substance that under the circumstances of the case it may fairly be assumed that the summary settlement with Autar was made before the 10th of October, 1859.

In their Lordships' judgment the less technical construction seems more in accord with the true intent of the enactment. It is easily conceivable that a settlement might be made within the [400] time-limit, and yet the formal document connected therewith might not, owing to causes beyond the control of the person with whom the settlement is made, be executed until later. The law must be absolutely explicit that non-execution within the time is fatal to the right which it expressly gives before it can be so construed. Section 3, which declares the right a taluqdar acquires in villages and lands settled with him, states that "he shall be deemed to have acquired thereby," (that is by the summary settlement), "a permanent heritable and transferable right in the estate comprising the villages and lands named in the list attached to the agreement or kabuliat executed by such taluqdar when such settlement was made." The right the taluqdar is declared to have acquired comes into existence with the settlement, the rest of the clause merely describes the properties with respect to which it takes effect. If the settlement was directed, on the 5th of October, to be made with Autar Singh, the delay in the signing of the formal documents would not affect the right he acquired thereby, as the execution of the agreement would relate back to the time when the settlement was in fact made. The authorities charged with the execution of the duties imposed by section 8 of the Act do not appear to have considered that the delay which had occurred in the signing of the kabuliat affected Autar Singh's rights in the properties settled with him in 1859, or differentiated him from the other taluqdars; and although the settlement had been made with him as malguzar, he was, in fact, included as a taluqdar in the general lists prepared under the section, and the property of Ranimau was entered against his name as the estate in his possession. Section 10 of the Act provides that "the courts shall take judicial notice of the said lists and shall regard them as conclusive evidence that the persons named therein are such taluqdars or grantees."

Their Lordships have no hesitation in holding that the properties settled with Autar Singh in 1859, together with those of which he obtained possession under decrees passed in his favour in the course of the regular settlement, constitute an "estate" within the meaning of the Act, and are consequently impartible.

The defendant's appeal relates to that portion of the lower court's decree which, affirming the order of the Subordinate [401] Judge, awarded to the plaintiff a half share in the properties subsequently acquired by Autar Singh. Janki Prasad has died since the institution of this appeal, and he is now represented by his minor son Dharaband Singh. It is contended on his behalf that by the custom of the family these acquisitions became part of the original estate, and are, therefore, not subject to the ordinary rules of inheritance.

Both the courts in India have come to the conclusion that the evidence is insufficient to establish the alleged custom. And no adequate reason has been shown to induce their Lordships to take a different view. The only other point that remains to be considered is whether the lands subsequently acquired were as a matter of fact incorporated with the taluqa. As has been pointed out by this Board in the case of Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jayadis Chunder Dhabal (1), the question whether properties acquired by an owner become part of "the ancestral estate for the purpose of his succession," depends on his intention to incorporate the acquisitions with the original estate.

The courts in India have concurrently found against the defendant, on this point, and their Lordships see no reason to differ from their conclusion. Both courts appear, however, to have fallen into an error in respect of one property, Kamrauli, for a half share of which they have made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. It is admitted on his behalf that Kamrauli is one of the villages for which Autar Singh obtained a decree in the regular settlement proceedings. The decree of the lower court must, therefore, be varied by the elimination of Kamrauli.

Subject to this variation both appeals will be dismissed, each party bearing his own costs.

And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[402] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tudball and Mr. Justice Muhammad Rafiq.

AMIN-UD-DIN HAIDAR (Judgment-debtor) v. SHEORAJ SINGH (Decree-holder.)*

[1st May, 1913.]

Civil Procedure Code (1882), Chapter XX—Insolvency—Insolvent discharged without a schedule of debts being framed—Attempt on the part of creditor to proceed against after-acquired property.

Where an insolvent had taken advantage of the provisions of chapter XX of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and had been discharged under section 351, but no schedule of debts had been framed, it was held that a judgment-creditor of the insolvent could not thereafter have recourse against property which had come into the hands of the insolvent subsequently to his discharge.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

One Amin-ud-din Haidar was declared a discharged insolvent in 1904. In his application for insolvency, among others, a debt due to Sheoraj Singh was mentioned, but no schedule of creditors was prepared, nor were any objections taken to his discharge. Another debtor, Ratan Lal, had applied to prove his debt and the District Judge had ordered his debt to be entered in a schedule and his name to be recorded as that of a creditor who had proved his claim ; but that order was reversed in appeal to the High Court (1). Some time after his discharge, Amin-ud-din Haider inherited certain property, and thereupon Sheoraj Singh applied to proceed against this property by way of execution. His claim was dismissed, and he was directed to take proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act. He then applied to prove his debt and have the property distributed among the creditors through a receiver who, it seems, had been appointed in the interval. The Judge dismissed the objections of Amin-ud-din Haidar, and allowed the application, on the ground that, although the High Court had reversed the order including Ratan Lal's claim, the order of appointment of the receiver had not been appealed against and had become final. The insolvent appealed to the High Court.

Mr. S. N. Mushran (The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru with him), for the appellant :

[403] This was an attempt to get behind the order of the High Court disallowing the claim of Ratan Lal. No schedule of creditors was prepared and no steps could be taken against the discharged insolvent. Proceedings had been taken under section 351 of Act XIV of 1882. It was not material whether the debt was admitted or not. It had to be proved by the creditor to the satisfaction of the court. It was a matter between the creditors inter se as well as between creditor and debtor. The preparation of the schedule was imperative. Otherwise any fictitious claim could be admitted and the right of creditors defeated. Section 357 also spoke of "scheduled creditors" only. These proceedings were taken under section 24 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but that provided for steps before the discharge and not after. The applicant could not now proceed against the property of the discharged insolvent.

35 A. 402=20 I. C. 316=11 A. L. J. 559.

Mr. Nihal Chand (for Mr. B. E. O'Conor), for the respondent :

It appeared that Amin-ud-din Haidar was declared discharged at the same time as he was declared insolvent. He had no property and it was not necessary to appoint a receiver. The debt of Sheoraj Singh was admitted by the appellant in his application for insolvency. The order appointing a receiver and vesting property in him had not been appealed against and had become final. Property was with the receiver and under section 24 applicant could prove his debt. The insolvent could not be said to have been properly discharged.

KNOX and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ :—Hakim Amin-ud-din is a judgment-debtor of one Kunwar Sheoraj Singh. There were proceedings in the court of Shahjahanpur prior to the proceedings out of which these proceedings have risen and with regard to those proceedings it is sufficient to say that Hakim Amin-ud-din did apply to be declared an insolvent. He was declared an insolvent and he was discharged under section 351 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. These proceedings relating to his discharge have been laid before us and we have examined them. We find that in one of them, i.e. an order by the District Judge, dated the 27th of January, 1904, it is set out, "no other creditor except Ratan Lal proves his claim to-day, though called upon." It was doubtless for this reason that no schedule was prepared and [404] very properly so ; for schedule cannot be prepared by a court until the creditors have proved their claims. This was the law under the procedure prevailing up to the passing of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907.

In 1912 Sheoraj Singh applied to the court of the District Judge and he asked that certain property which had come into the possession of the judgment-debtor might be placed at the disposal of the Collector of Budaun, so that he might arrange for the payment of the debt due to Sheoraj.

The application was opposed by Hakim Amin-ud-din, the judgment-debtor, who said that he had been discharged from all debts and the court had no power to make the property which he had since acquired liable. The District Judge granted the application of Sheoraj and directed that one Saiyid Janab Ahmad who had been appointed receiver in 1910 should realize the assets of the insolvent and divide them between the two scheduled creditors, Ratan Lal and Sheoraj Singh.

It is this order which forms the subject of the present appeal.

We have looked at the record ourselves. We cannot find, and neither of the learned counsel for the parties can point to, any schedule of creditors. Amin-ud-din in his memorandum of appeal himself says that as no schedule of creditors was prepared before the discharge of the insolvent the applicant cannot be allowed to proceed against the appellant. There being no schedule of creditors to this case Kunwar Sheoraj Singh cannot now enforce his decree as though he were a scheduled creditor.

The appeal prevails, the order of the court below is set aside, but we do not think this is a case in which the judgment-debtor is entitled to his costs.

Appeal allowed.

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), section 20—Occupancy holding—Mortgage—Sub-mortgage by mortgagee of occupancy holding—Rights of sub-mortgagees.

Where the usufructuary mortgagee of an occupancy holding purported to sub-mortgage his mortgagee rights, it was held that the sub-mortgagees were entitled to a money decree against their sub-mortgagor for the money advanced by them.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

Certain property, consisting partly of a fixed rate holding and partly of an occupancy holding, was transferred by way of usufructuary mortgage to one Nagina Misir in 1906.. In 1909 Nagina Misir purported to make a sub-mortgage of the same property in favour of Balgobind Bhagat and Mahabir Ram. The sub-mortgagees sued for the amount of the mortgage money, principal and interest, or in the alternative for possession of certain property. The court of first instance gave the plaintiffs a money decree. On appeal, however, the lower appellate court reversed this decree and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala and Babu Benode Behari, for the appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J. and LYLE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed the sum of Rs. 499-15-0 principal and Rs. 270 interest. In the alternative they claimed that they might be put into possession of certain property. The court of first instance gave a simple money decree. The lower appellate court reversed the decree of the court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiff's suit; hence this appeal.

It appears that certain property, consisting partly of a fixed rate holding and partly of an occupancy holding was transferred by way of usufructuary mortgage to Nagina Misir in 1906. In 1909 Nagina Misir purported to make a sub-mortgage of the same property in favour of the plaintiffs. There can be [406] no doubt that the mortgage of 1906, in so far as it purported to mortgage an occupancy holding, was absolutely void. Indeed we think, though it is not essential for the decision of the present case to decide the point, that the whole mortgage of 1906 was invalid. The defendants contend that the very same doctrine ought to be applied to the sub-mortgage, and that, the contract being an illegal one, the plaintiffs should not be allowed to get even a simple money decree. If the mortgagees under the mortgage of 1906 were unable to recover either the property or to get a separate money decree for the amount lent (and it is admitted they did not get possession) it would be on the ground that the contract was an illegal contract. We have therefore to see whether the contract which was made in 1909 between the plaintiffs and the defendants was also illegal. S. 20 of the Agra Tenancy Act provides that the interest of an occupancy tenant is not transferable save as therein mentioned. But in 1909 Nagina Misir was not an occupancy tenant nor had he any of the rights of an occupancy tenant vested in him. The transfer to him by the occupancy tenant was absolutely void, at least in respect of the occupancy holding. Therefore it seems to us that Nagina Misir, not being an occupancy tenant, did nothing in contravention of s. 20 of the Tenancy Act when he executed the sub-mortgage. He really did nothing worse than if he had purported to make a mortgage of property which did not belong to him. In the absence of fraud there would be no illegality in this. We therefore think that under the circumstances of the present case the plaintiffs were entitled to a simple money decree. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore the decree of the court of first instance with costs.

Appeal allowed.

EMPEROR v. NEPAL AND OTHERS.*

[1st May, 1913.]

Crminal Procedure Code, sections 55, 56 and 110—Arrest of suspected person—Warrant —Procedure.

Section 55 of the Code of Crimlnal Procedure is independent of Charter VIII of the Code, although proceedings under that chapter may follow an arrest under section 55 as a natural sequence. An officer in charge of a police station can, therefore, arrest or cause to be arrested, without a warrant or an order of a Magistrate, any person who is by repute an habitual robber, house-breaker or thief, or otherwise comes within the scope of section 110.

In this case a police Sub-Inspector, one Har Prasad, deputed certain police officers subordinate to himself to arrest a person named Nepal, against whom the police were about to take proceedings under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with a view to his being bound over to be of good behaviour, and gave them a written order to carry out the arrest. Nepal and others resisted the police who were sent to arrest Nepal, and ultimately thirteen persons were sent up for trial and were convicted on charges under sections 147, 225B and 332 of the Indian Penal Code. The persons so convicted appealed to the Sessions Judge, who, however, dismissed their appeals. They then applied in revision to the High Court, raising two pleas, one, that the arrest of Nepal was illegal, and the other that the sentences were too severe.

Mr. C. Ross Alston and Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malcomson), for the Crown.

TUDBALL, J.—The thirteen applicants have been convicted of offences under sections 147, 225B and 332 of the Indian Penal Code. Their convictions and sentences were upheld on appeal. The present application for revision raises two points—(1) That the arrest without a warrant of Nepal by the police was illegal and therefore the resistance offered to the police constituted no offence, and (2) that the sentences are too severe. According to the evidence on the record, the Sub-Inspector, Har Prasad, deputed certain police officers subordinate to himself to arrest [408] Nepal against whom the police were about to take proceedings under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with a view to his being bound over to be of good behaviour. According to the evidence, the police officer in question gave a written order to his subordinate officer to carry out this arrest. The plea in revision is that in the absence of the authority under chapter VIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the police cannot arrest without a warrant a person against whom proceedings under section 110 are contemplated. Under section 55, clause (c), an officer in charge of a police station may arrest or cause to be arrested any person who is by repute an habitual robber, house-breaker, or thief or habitual receiver of stolen property knowing it to be stolen or who by repute habitually commits extortion, or in order to the committing of extortion, habitually puts or attempts to put persons in fear of injury. This is a section which is independent of Chapter VIII, although proceedings under Chapter VIII may follow such arrest as a natural sequence. Such a police officer may arrest without an order from a magistrate and without a warrant.

Section 55 says: "He may in 'like manner' arrest" and 'like manner' refers to section 54, which gives a police officer power to arrest without an order from a magistrate and without a warrant in certain specified cases. Section 56 points out that where any officer in charge of a police station requires any officer subordinate to him to arrest without a warrant any person, he may deliver to the officer required to make arrest an order in writing. So far as the evidence on the record goes, all the provisions of these sections were fully complied with, and the police were justified in making the arrest or attempting to make the arrest. Moreover, according to the evidence of the Sub-Inspector, the action he was taking was in pursuance of the permission of the Sub-divisional officer. Even that was not necessary under section 55. The plea as, therefore, no force in the circumstances of the present case.

There remains the question of sentence. The only portions of the sentences which need any comment, are the fines. Nepal has received a sentence of two and a half years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. Moti Ram has been sentenced to one [409] year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 300. Musammat Ram Kunwar, the wife of Nepal, to four weeks' imprisonment and Rs. 30 fine. The three youths Har Lal, Jagram and Kamal Singh, have been bound over under section 562 and have been fined Rs. 75, Rs. 20 and Rs. 20. The other applicants have been sentenced to imprisonment only. In some cases, where fines are imposed in lieu of terms of imprisonment, it may be necessary to impose heavy fines. But, in the present case, the accused have received substantial sentences of imprisonment and the extra fines imposed will transfer a part of their punishment to their dependants also. In the case of Nepal, I set aside the fine completely. His sentence under section 225 B. will remain six months without fine. In the case of Moti Ram his sentence is a fine of Rs. 300 under section 225B plus one year's rigorous imprisonment under section 332 of the Indian Penal Code and six months under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code. In his case, as the fine is the only sentence imposed under section 225B, I reduce it to one of Rs. 30 or in default six weeks' imprisonment. In the case of Ram Kunwar, she was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 30 under section 225B. No term of imprisonment was imposed for this offence. For offences under sections 147 and 332 of the Indian Penal Code, she has received two weeks' imprisonment in each. In her case, I reduce the fine to Rs. 5 or in default to imprisonment for two weeks. In the case of the three youths, Har Lal, Jagram and Kamal Singh, I reduce the fine in each case to a nominal sum of Re. 1 or in default to two weeks' imprisonment. In all other respects the sentences will stand. The fines or the balances of the fines, as the case may be, if paid, will be refunded.

Act No. III of 1907 (Provincial Insolvency Act), sections 22, 46 and 52—Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), section 5—Insolvency—Application to Court to reverse act of receiver—Limitation.

Held that section 5 of the Indian Limitaion Act, 1908, does not apply to application, contemplated by section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907. Dropadi v. Hira Lal (1) distinguished.

[Ref: 1914 M. W. N. 831=25 I. C. 610.]

ONE Thakur Prasad was a secured creditor of an insolvent being a mortgagee in possession. A receiver was appointed by the court, and it appears that on the 20th of September, 1911, the receiver took possession of the mortgaged property. On the 31st of October, 1911, Thakur Prasad applied to the court under section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, praying that the act of the receiver might be reversed and the applicant restored to possession. The District Judge held that as the application had been made more than twenty-one days after the act complained of, it was time-barred, and accordingly rejected it. The applicant thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Govind Prasad, for the appellant.

The respondents were not represented.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ:—The facts of the case, out of which this appeal arises, are as follows :—The appellant is a secured creditor of an insolvent. He was a mortgagee in possession. A receiver was appointed by the court, and it appears that on the 20th of September, 1911, he took possession of the property in question. On the 31st of October, 1911, the present appellant made an application under section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to the court asking it to reverse the act of the receiver and to restore him to possession, he being a secured creditor. The learned District Judge held that as the application was made more than twenty-one days after the act complained of had been done, it was time-barred. He accordingly rejected the application. On appeal before us it is urged that the act complained of did not come to the [411] notice of the appellant on the date when it was done or soon after it and the appellant went to the court without delay, and therefore the court ought to have applied section 5 of the Limitation Act and admitted the application. The appellant did not ask the court to admit his application out of time and there is therefore on the record no evidence whatsoever to show that there was sufficient cause for so doing. We therefore remit the following issue to the court below :—"When did the act of the receiver first come to the knowledge of the appellant?" The court will take any evidence offered on the issue by the parties and remit its finding. On receipt of the finding ten days will be allowed for objections.

On the return of the findings the following judgment was delivered :—

The return made by the court below to the issue remitted is that the appellant came to know of the act of the receiver on the 27th of October, 1911, i. e. four days prior to his filing the application of 31st of October, 1911. If section 5 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908), could apply to the application made by the appellant to the court below, then we should be of opinion that the appellant was entitled to ask the court to exercise the power granted by that section. But, in our opinion, section 5 of the Limitation Act does not apply to applications contemplated by section 22 of the Insolvency Act. Section 5 of the Limitation Act runs as follows:—"Any appeal or application for a review of judgment or for leave to appeal or any other application to which this section may be made applicable by any enactment or rule for the time being in force may be admitted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor, when the appellant or applicant satisfies the court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal or making the application within such period." An application under section 22 of the Insolvency Act to the District Judge is not an appeal, application for review of judgment or for leave to appeal, and it is admitted that there is no rule or enactment under which this section was made applicable to section 22 of the Insolvency Act. Our attention is called to the Full Bench ruling in Dropadi v. Hira Lal (1). But that ruling does not help [412] the appellant. Granting that the general provisions of the Limitation Act apply to the Insolvency Act, the very wording of section 5 limits the applicability of that section to appeals and applications of a certain character. An application under section 22 of the Insolvency Act does not come in any way within the category of such applications. It is urged that the application to the District Judge against the act of the receiver is really an appeal as is contemplated by section 5 of the Limitation Act. Clause (2) of section 52 of the Insolvency Act is quoted, which runs as follows':—"Subject to the appeal to the court provided for by section 22, any order made or act done by the Official Receiver in the exercise of the said powers shall be deemed the order or act of the court." It seems to us clear that the word 'appeal' in this clause is not used in the strict legal meaning of the word. The very wording of the section shows this. Section 22 is perfectly clear. The proviso says :—"Provided that no application under this section shall be entertained after the expiration of twenty-one days from the date of the order or decision complained of." The right of appeal is given in section 46 of the Act. In our opinion an application under section 22 of the Act against an "act" of the receiver is not and cannot be an "appeal" such as is contemplated by section 5 of the Limitation Act. It is clear, therefore, that section 5 of the Limitation Act does not apply and the court below was, therefore, bound to reject the application made to it and this appeal must fail. It is dismissed. We make no order as to costs, as the other side is not represented.

SONA DEI AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. FAKIR CHAND AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[9th May, 1913].

Maha-Brahmans—Agreement as to distribution of offerings—Construction of agreement.

The members of a family of Maha-Brahmans entered into an agreement amongst themselves whereby certain members of the family were to take the [413] offerings made on certain days of the month, and the other members of the family the offerings made on the other days.

Held by BANERJI and LYLE, JJ. (RICHARDS, C. J., dissenting) that such an agreement as above described would not prevent a person who wished to do so from making a special individual gift to a member of one branch of the family, even on a day which was appropriated by the agreement to the other branch, and that a claim for such gift by a member of the other branch was not maintainable.

Per RICHARDS, C. J. If the offering was of a nature which was included in agreement between the parties, the wishes of the donor could not regulate the rights of the parties, but the recipient of such an offering on a day which did not belong to his branch of the family was bound to account for it to the branch to which the day belonged. Doorga Pershad v. Budree (1) and Oochi v. Ulfat (2) referred to.

The facts of this case were as follows:—

THE parties belonged to a family of Maha-Brahmans. By an arrangement made between the members of the family, the offerings made on certain days in the month were to go to one Nanda, the husband of the plaintiff Sona Dei, while those made on other days were to go to the defendants. Nanda died, leaving the plaintiff as his heir. On the day which fell to the share of the plaintiff one Debi Singh died. Debi Singh's son refused to make the offerings to the widow, as she was a female, and gave property of some value to Fakir Chand, defendant. The plaintiff, thereupon, brought this suit for recovery of the offerings or their value. The defendant pleaded that the gift was a personal gift to Fakir Chand and no suit lay for recovery of such offerings. The courts below sustained this contention and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The appeal was argued on the 7th of May, 1913, before RICHARDS, C. J., and LYLE, J., and then, upon an order made by the Chief Justice, was re-argued before the present Bench.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Pandit Rama Kant Malaviya) for the appellant:—

The members of the family had made an arrangement by which certain members were to receive the offerings on certain days, and others on other days. The defendant received offerings on the day which was the plaintiff's day. The donor admits that he knew that it was the plaintiff's day and made the gift to the defendant; but the defendant was under an obligation not to accept that gift or, if he did, to make it over to the plaintiff. Having accepted the gift, he must be deemed to have received it for the use and [414] benefit of the plaintiff. The donor could not be compelled to make the gift to the plaintiff, but the defendant, having entered into a contract not to receive the gift on that day, must be deemed to have acted as a trustee for the plaintiff and is bound to make it over to her, who would be in the position of a cestui qui trust. The present case is similar to a case where two doctors entered into an agreement that one of them would not treat patients within a certain area. If a patient goes to the doctor who has agreed to refrain from so practising, he will be bound to make over any fee that he may receive to the other doctor. In this case a trust was created, inasmuch as the gift was made (1) on a day which belonged to the plaintiff, (2) in connection with funeral ceremonies by which the family would have been entitled to benefit, (3) to a man who was bound by the contract. He relied on Doorga Pershad v. Budree (1), Oochi v. Ulfat (2) Godefroi on Trust, 221, 226.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondents:—

There can be no doubt that the gifts made by Raghubir Narain were voluntary gifts. The plaintiffs could not bring a suit for an injunction to restrain the making or receiving of such gifts, against either the donor or the donee. It has been held that there is no legal cause of action to recover such offerings even as against the donee. The other side contends that the defendant, having received the gift on the plaintiff's day, in good conscience ought to make it over to the plaintiff, but there would be no such equity, unless the original contract was that even in cases where the gift was made personally to one individual, the gift would go to the person whose turn it would be to take it. The gift would be personal, not because it was handed over to the donee physically, but because it was so handed to him intentionally by the donor with the object that he alone should take it and nobody else. The object of the partition was, no doubt, to put an end to disputes, but all that the parties had in contemplation was to divide that property only that would or might be divisible. Where the property was given to one member individually it would not be divisible among the parties to [415] the arrangement. All would be in the same position, equally entitled to appropriate wholly personal gifts and divide those only which were not personal. Upon any other view, the members would be placed under a disability and disqualified from acquiring any separate property.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru replied.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed to recover from the defendants certain offerings which had been made on the occasion of the death of one Rai Bahadur Debi Singh. It appears that the plaintiff and the defendant are both members of the same family of Maha-Brahmans, the common ancestor of which was one Dhan Singh. Both the courts below have found that an arrangement had been come to between the members of the family with a view to the division of the offerings. Certain members of the family were to have certain days of the month and certain other members, other days. Both the courts below have found that the offerings in question were made on a day which belonged to the plaintff. But the plaintiff's suit was dismissed upon the ground that the offerings in question were personal offerings, made to Fakir Chand, the defendant.

It is admitted that so far as the donor of these efferings is concerned, no court could interfere to compel him to make the offerings to any particular individual. On the other hand, it has been admitted that an arrangement between the Maha-Brahmans as to the division of the offerings between themselves is perfectly legal. This has been decided in two cases [see Doorga Pershed v. Budree (1) and Oochi v. Ulfat (2)]. It seems to me that the whole case turns upon the nature of the agreement and the nature of the gift. There cannot be the least doubt that unless the gift in question was within the scope of the arrangement which the courts below have found existed between the parties, the plaintiff cannot succeed. The agreement was not in writing. It is stated in somewhat general terms in the plaint and evidently the court below accepted the statement in the plaint as being the terms of the agreement. The object of the agreement was beyond doubt to prevent disputes as to the division of the offerings. As the family [416] increased, some such agreement was obviously very necessary. In my opinion the only fair interpretation to give to the agreement is that the descendants of Dhan Singh agreed amongst themselves that all the offerings that were made upon the occasions of death to any members or member of the family should be divided in accordance with the agreement. As the learned advocate for the plaintiff said in the course of the arguments, the agreement amounted to this, namely, that each member or branch of the family agreed to refrain from taking the offerings on the days assigned to the other member or branch. It is said that this agreement could only apply to offerings that were made to the family as such. This seems to me to be rather a restricted view to take. If it was open to the members of the family to exclude from the scope of the arrangement all gifts which any individual might prevail on the donor to say was to be his, it would mean that the agreement would be practically futile. While, on the other hand, if the agreement is interpreted to include all gifts that were made to any of the members of the family of Dhan Singh, it might reasonably carry out the object of the arrangement, namely, to avoid disputes.

I next come to the nature of the gift. It must at once be admitted that if this gift was made for a purpose disconnected with cremation ceremonies, the plaintiff would have no right. But reading the evidence of Raghubir Narain Singh it seems to me perfectly clear that this gift was a gift directly in connection with cremation ceremonies, that it was made to one of the members of the family of Dhan Singh, and that the only reason why it was made to Fakir Chand instead of the plaintiff was because the donor has been informed that it would be more efficacious if the gift was not divided and if it was not given to a female. It seems to me that if the offering was of a nature which was included in the agreement between the parties the wishes of the donor could not regulate the rights of the parties to the present suit. Fakir Chand might have refused to take the gift if the donor coupled the donation with the condition that he must keep it entirely for himself. I think that so long as the agreement continued to exist, Fakir Chand having taken the gift was bound to make it over to the plaintiff in accordance with the agreement. For these reasons I think the [417] decision of the court below was erroneous and I would allow the appeal.

BANERJI, J.—I regret I cannot agree with the learned Chief Justice in the conclusion at which he has arrived. I fully agree with him that the whole case turns upon the nature of the contract, a breach of which is the foundation of the plaintiff's suit, and also on the nature of the gift made by Raghubir Narain Singh on the occasion of his father's death. It is alleged in the plaint that Dhan Singh, the ancestor of the family, was the Maha-Brahman of the particular village in question and that offerings made to this family of Maha-Brahmans were offerings to the members of the family as such. In order to prevent disputes between the members of the family as to the division of the offerings, they entered into an arrangement by which individual members of the family were to take offerings given on certain dates, but it seems to me from the nature of the offerings which, according to the plaintiff's own case, were agreed to be divided, that the offerings which were to be divided were the offerings made to individual members of the family as such members and not offerings made personally to individual Maha-Brahmans who were members of the family. If the contract between the parties was that they were to divide the offerings given on a particular date to any member of the family, whether as representing the family, or in his individual capacity as a Maha-Brahman, the plaintiff would of course be entitled to the offerings received on the particular day which was the day on which her turn for receiving offerings accrued. In the present case neither of the courts below has found that the contract between the parties was of the wide nature just now mentioned, and as I have already said, it was not the plaintiff's own case, as laid in the plaint.

If then the contract related to offerings made to the family as such, any present made to an individual member of the family in his personal capacity would not fall within the scope of the contract. In the present case, according to the evidence af Raghubir Narain Singh and according to the findings of both the courts below, the present made by him was a present individually to Fakir, defendant, and the donor distinctly stated at the time of the gift, that the offerings were not to be divided among the Maha-Brahmans and they were [418] not to go to a female member of the family. It is clear from his evidence, which I think has been rightly interpreted by the court below, that the offerings in question were made to Fakir in his individual capacity, and not as representing the Maha-Brahman family of which the parties were members. That being so, I think the plaintiff is not entitled to the offerings claimed and her suit has been rightly dismissed. I would dismiss the appeal.

LYLE, J.—I concur with the judgment of Mr. Justice Banerji. There can be no doubt that where there is an agreement among Maha-Brahmans, that offerings shall be taken by a particular man on a particular day, the agreement is one which will be enforced in law. But in the absence of any special stipulation, such an agreement can only refer to offerings made to the general body or to the whole family, as the case may be, of Maha-Brahmans. Where a client wishes to benefit a particular Maha-Brahman by making him a special gift, there is nothing to prevent his doing so, and in such a case no other Maha-Brahman can claim any share in the gift. It seems to me as clear as possible in this case that it was the deliberate wish of the donor not only to benefit the defendant but to exclude the plaintiff. I do not think it is necessary to consider what the motives were that animated him. It is sufficient to say that he knew that if the gift were made to the whole family the plaintiff might get a share of it. Not wishing that she should, he deliberately elected to make the gift, not to the whole family, but to the defendant individually. No doubt the gift was what might be called a funeral gift, but it was open to anyone to make a funeral gift either to a family of Maha-Brahmans, or to an individual Maha-Brahman as he might wish. In this case, I think, he made his offering to an individual Maha-Brahman, and the plaintiff is, therefore, not entitled to any share. I would, therefore, affirm the decrees of the lower courts and dismiss the appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (1882), section 315—Execution of decree—Sale in execution—Auction purchaser deprived of property purchased owing to failure of judgment-debtor's title—Suit to recover purchase money—Limitation—Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule I, articles 62 and 120.

Held (1) that an auction purchaser seeking to recover the purchase money paid by him upon the ground that he has been deprived of the property purchased owing to failure of the judgment-debtor's title thereto has no right outside the Code of Civil Procedure, and (2) that the remedy given by the Code of Civil Procedure is not a suit for money had and received, to which article 62 of the first schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, would apply but is a suit falling within the purview of article 120. Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (1), and Mohiudeen Ibrahim v. Mahomed Mura Lewai (2) followed. Ram Kumar Shaha v. Ram Gour Shaha (3) not followed. Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (4) distinguished.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

In execution of a decree passed against certain persons the house property of the judgment-debtors was sold on the 18th of March, 1907. The plaintiffs purchased the property for Rs. 15,200. There being other decrees against the same judgment-debtors, the decree holders in those cases applied for rateable distribution of the assets, which consisted of Rs. 15,200 paid by the plaintiffs. The money was distributed as prayed. One Ram Prasad Singh brought a suit against the plaintiffs for a declaration that the property sold was his and the judgment-debtors had no saleable interest in it and he prayed for setting aside the sale. The sale was set aside on the 11th of September, 1907. The High Court on appeal affirmed that decree on the 22nd of November, 1909. The plaintiffs brought the present suit on the 12th of September, 1910, for a refund of the purchase money against the defendant who had received shares in the distribution of the Rs. 15,200. The court below held that the suit was filed beyond three years from the date of the distribution of assets and was barred by limitation. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

[420] The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with him Pandit Braj Nath Vyas), for the appellant :—

Section 313 and 315 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 lay down that if the judgement-debtor has no saleable interest, the auction-purchaser is entitled to a refund of his purchase money. This right is expressly given by statute, but the question at one time was whether that remedy was the only remedy or the auction-purchaser could get a refund by means of a regular suit too. There is no doubt that the money can be recovered by suit—Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (1)—and that from the persons who have received shares in the distribution of assets ; Kishun Lal v. Muhammad Safdar Ali Khan (2). The case of Gurshidawa v. Gangaya (3) settles the point as to when the cause of action arose. The judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, and the purchaser had a right to recover what he had paid. The Act of 1859 gave no guarantee to the purchaser. He took everything or nothing. The Act of 1882 guaranteed the existence of some saleable interest at least of the judgment-debtor in the property, the failure of which guarantee gives a right of action. No period is provided for suits like these by any special article of the Limitation Act. So article 120 of the Limitation Act would apply.

[The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, for the respondents, mentioned that the sections 313 to 315 were not in force at the date of this suit, the law in force being the Act of 1908, order XXI, rule 92.]

The sale took place under the Code of 1882 on the 18th of March, 1907, and the sale proceeds were divided in July, 1907. The relations were created when the Code of 1882 was in force. Under the General Clauses Act (X of 1897), section 6 (c), the right acquired while the old Act was in force is not affected by the new Code. As to limitation. There are cases supporting both views one set of cases holds that the omnibus article 120 applies to a suit like this, while others hold that article 97 applies. I submit that article 120 is applicable, but even if article 97 applies the suit has been brought within three years of the failure of consideration ; [421] Mohiudeen Ibrahim v. Mahomed Mura Lewai (4) and Nilakanta v. Imam Sahib (5) hold article 120 to be applicable. Gurshidawa v. Gangaya (3) mentions no article, but holds that the cause of action arises when the purchaser is deprived of the property sold.

The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru (with him The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba, The Hon'ble Munshi Gokul Prasad, Munshi Gulzari Lal, Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq and Munshi Kalindi Prasad), for the respondents :—

The right to bring a suit like this is a right which is independent of section 315. If you take the right to be the creation of statute, then the remedy given by the statute should be applied. The Code contemplates an application to the Court executing the decree. The suit is therefore not maintainable under the Code. I submit that the right to bring the suit is a right independent of section 315, a general right, and under section 11 of the Code of 1882 a suit is maintainable. I rely on Hari Doyal v. Sheikh Samsuddin (1), Nityanund Roy v. Juggat Chandra Guha (2) and Dorab Ally Khan v. Abdool Azeez (3). Section 315 only provides a summary remedy: Kishun Lal v. Muhammad Safdar Ali (4). This is a suit for relief on the ground of total failure of consideration from the beginning, and article 62 of the Limitation Act will apply. He further cited Bhawani Kuar v. Rikhi Ram (5) and Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (6). The last case was of a sale of a member's interest in a joint family which could not be sold. The case is in point. There too the sale failed as the vendor had no saleable interest. The same principle applies here; Ram Kumar Shaha v. Ram Gour Shaha (7). If the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, there was a failure of consideration from the beginning. It is, however, a suit for money had and received. The right arises out of the Statute, but the form is not prescribed by it.

My second point is that the remedy is not available against my clients, who have only received shares in the distribution of assets. They are neither the judgment-debtors nor were they parties to the suit to set aside the sale. The first essential for a suit under [422] section 315 is that it must be "found" that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest. I submit that it must be found by the Court against those against whom the claim is made; Vithoba v. Esat (8).

RICHARDS, C. J. and LYLE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs claimed to recover a sum of Rs. 15,200 in certain proportionate shares from the several defendants. The suit has been dismissed by the court below as being barred by limitation. The facts, for the purposes of the present appeal, may be taken as admitted. A decree-holder of the name of Mayanand Gir caused certain property to be put to sale in order to realize the amount of a decree. The property was sold and purchased by the plaintiffs. An objection was taken on the part of a claimant to the property in the execution proceedings, but the objection was disallowed with the result that the purchase in favour of the present plaintiff was confirmed on the 20th of May, 1907. The proceeds of the sale were paid into court and were distributed amongst the persons who held decrees against the judgment-debtor of Mayanand Gir. Its distribution took place on the 1st of July, 1907. Subsequently the claimant to the property brought a regular suit to which he made the present plaintiffs parties and also Mayanand Gir. That suit was decreed by the court of first instance on the 11th of September, 1907, and after various hearings was confirmed by the High Court on the 22nd of November, 1909. The plaintiffs instituted the present suit on the 12th of September, 1910, claiming to get back the purchase money as already mentioned. The court below, holding that the suit was one for "money had and received" by the defendants for the use of the plaintiffs, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit as being barred by limitation on the ground that article 62 applied and that time began to run from the 1st of July, 1907, when the decree-holders received the money.

The plaintiffs come here in appeal contending that the decision of the court below was wrong. It seems to us that, apart from the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiffs in the present case would have no right to recover back the purchase money they paid merely on the ground that the judgment-debtor's title had [423] proved defective. This seems to have been the view taken by STRAIGHT, J., when referring a question to the Full Bench in the case of Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (1). The learned Judge, after referring to a number of rulings, says:—"By all these decisions it seems to have been recognized as an established principle of law, that a purchaser at a sale in execution of decree cannot recover his purchase money, if it turns out that the judgment-debtors, whose immovable property he has purchased, had no saleable interest." When the case came before the Full Bench this view of the law seems to have been accepted. The learned Chief Justice refers to section 315 of the Code of Civil Procedure, then in force, as being the foundation of the plaintiffs' right, in that case, to get a return of his purchase-money. This also seems to have been the view taken by NAPIER, J., in the case of Mohiudeen Ibrahim v. Mahomed Mura Lewai (2). At page 489 the learned Judge says:—"It has been laid down by the Privy Council in Dorab Ali Khan v. The Executors of Khaju Moheeoodeen, that as in India movable and immovable property are alike capable of being seized and sold under the writ of fieri facias, the responsibility of the sheriff in respect of sales here is governed by the law relating to chattels rather than by that relating to the sale of real property. It is clear that where the property seized was personal estate and it was sold by the sheriff, no suit lay either against the sheriff or the judgment-creditor, who had received the purchase money, to recover it when the property had been recovered from the purchaser by a person claiming title, the principle being that a sale by the sheriff was not a sale in market overt, the purchaser acquiring thereby only what the judgment-creditor had a right to sell, namely, the precise interest, and no more, which the judgment-debtor possessed in the goods, and that there was no warranty of title implied in a sale by the sheriff." We agree that outside the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, to which we shall presently refer, an auction-purchaser has no right to recover back the purchase money merely by showing that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest.

The real reason is that in a sale by the court or its officer, there is no warranty of title, and the money which the purchaser pays [424] cannot, either in law or equity, be said to have been received by the court, its officer, or the creditors for the use of the auction-purchaser. We, therefore, think that, assuming that the plaintiffs had any cause of action, their cause of action was to enforce the right which was given to them by sections 313 to 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 (which admittedly was in force at the time of the sale and distribution of the purchase money in the present case). Section 315 provides, amongst other things, that when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it, the purchaser, shall be entitled to receive back his purchase money from any person to whom the purchase money has been paid.

There is an alteration in the present Code which we need not consider for the reason mentioned above. The plaintiffs' right is regulated in the present suit by the provisions of the Code of 1882.

In the Full Bench case to which we have already referred, viz. Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (1), it was unanimously decided that an auction-purchaser was entitled to bring a suit to recover back his purchase money, when it was found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest. It seems to us quite clear that this is a form of suit for which there is no special provision in the Limitation Act. We have already pointed out how, in our opinion, it cannot be said to be a suit for money had and received. We, therefore, think that article 120 applies and it is admitted that if this is the proper article the suit is within time. The learned advocate on behalf of the respondents urges that even if it be held that the plaintiffs' right in the present case is a right under the statutory provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, the suit is nevertheless a suit for money had and received by the defendants for the use of the plaintiffs, and he quotes, in support of this contention, the case of Ram Kumar Shaha v. Ram Gour Shaha (2). The learned Judges, in deciding that case referred to the case of Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (3), and say as follows, at page 1083 :—" We are unable to distinguish this case in principle from the case before us." With [425] great respect to the learned Judges we think that the cases were distinguishable. In Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (3) the money was sought to be recovered on the ground that there had been a failure of consideration in the case of a private sale, whilst the case before the learned Judges in Ram Kumar Shaha v. Ram Gour Shaha (2) was a case, like the present one, in which an auction-purchaser sought to recover his purchase money on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest. As against the authority of this case we have the case, already referred to, of Mohiudeen Ibrahim v. Mahomed Mura Lewai (4), in which the learned Judges expressly decided that article 120 was the article applicable to a suit in which an auction-purchaser sought to recover the purchase money on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest.

Under these circumstances, we think that the appeal should be allowed and the case remanded : We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the court below and remand the case with directions to readmit the suit under its original number in the file and proceed to determine the same according to law. Costs heretofore will be in the discretion of the court disposing of the suit.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XXXIX, rule 1 ; order XLIII, rule 1—Injunction—Order refusing injunction—Appeal.

Held that an appeal lies from an order refusing, as well as from one granting, a temporary injunction.

[Ref. 43 All. 383; Rel. 83 I. C. 48; Dist. 27 I. C. 131; Ref. 1924 Pat. 169.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

Two decrees were obtained against one Musammat Dropadi, in execution of which certain property was attached. Lachmi Narain objected to the attachment and sale of that property on the ground that it belonged to him and not to the judgment-debtor. His objection was disallowed and he then brought a suit to establish his right. In the course of that suit he applied for a temporary [426] injunction to restrain the defendant decree-holder from putting the property to sale. The lower court refused the application, merely remarking that the applicant could deposit the decree money. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, where a preliminary objection was raised by the respondents that the appeal did not lie.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, for the respondents.

TUDBALL AND MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ :—This is an appeal from an order passed by the court below under order XXXIX, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Two decrees were obtained against one Musammat Dropadi, in execution of which certain property was attached. Lachmi Narain objected to the attachment and sale of that property on the ground that it belonged to him and not to the judgment-debtor. His objection was disallowed and he then brought a suit to establish his right. In the course of that suit he applied for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant decree-holder from putting the property to sale. The lower court has refused the application, merely remarking that the applicant can deposit the decree money. A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies from the order. It is contended that order XLIII, rule 1, clause (r), merely relates to an order granting an injunction, but not to an order refusing to grant an injunction. In our opinion, an order refusing as well as one granting an injunction is an order passed under that rule and the language of that rule covers both classes of orders. There is no force in the preliminary objection. As regards the merits, the application is not strongly opposed and, in the circumstances of the case, the injunction ought to have been granted by the court below. We allow the appeal, set aside the order of the court below and grant a temporary injunction restraining the sale pending the final decision of the suit. Costs in the present matter will abide the event.

Appeal allowed.

[15th May, 1913.]

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XLI, rule 23; order XLIII, r. 1 (u)—Suit dismissed for default of appearance, but restored by appellate court—Remand—Appeal.

Held that no appeal would lie from an appellate order directing that a suit, which had been dismissed because neither party had appeared, should be restored to the file of pending cases and heard.

In this case the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed because neither party appeared. The plaintiff, without applying for the restoration of the case, appealed against the decree to the District Judge. The District Judge allowed the appeal and remanded the case for decision on the merits. Against this order the defendants appealed to the High Court, and at the hearing a preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay.

Pandit Baldeo Ram Dave (for The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal), for the respondents, raised a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay from the order. The appeal purports to have been filed under clause (u) of order XLIII, rule 1, from an order supposed to have been made under order XLI, rule 23. The order appealed against has not been made under rule 23, order XLI. Rule 23 contemplates a case in which the court of first instance disposes of a suit upon a preliminary point and passes a "decree" and the "decree" is reversed on appeal. No "decree" has been made in this case by the court of first instance and the case has not been decided on a preliminary point. The "order" made by the court of first instance is not a "decree." In such cases there is no appeal from the appellate decree of the court. If the appeal had been dismissed by the District Judge, no second appeal would have lain to this Court. The law did not contemplate an appeal where the appeal was allowed by the District Judge.

Mr. Nihal Chand (for Dr. S. M. Suleman), for the appellant: An appeal is allowed from an order of remand. Here an order of remand was passed and an appeal can be entertained. The court below had no jurisdiction to pass the order that it did.

[428] Even if no appeal lies, the court below having acted without jurisdiction, I submit, the case should be entertained under the provisions of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies. The suit was dismissed by the court of first instance as neither of the parties appeared. One party went up in appeal to the court below, which entertained the appeal, set aside the order of dismissal and directed that the first court should hear the case. The opposite party has come up in second appeal, and it is urged that no appeal lies. On behalf of the appellants it is urged that an appeal lies under order XLIII, rule 1, clause (u), of the Code of Civil Procedure. This order relates to orders passed by appellate courts under order XLI, rule 23. In the present case the order passed by the court below is clearly not an order under order XLI, rule 23, and therefore under order XLIII, RAM KUBER PANDE AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. RAM DASI (Plaintiff).*

[23rd May, 1913.]

Hindu law—Joint Hindu family—Mortgage—Suit for cancellation of mortgage executed by managing member—Compromise—Liability of sons.

One K, as head of a joint Hindu family, executed in 1905 a usufructuary mortgage of the family property, in which the widow of his deceased brother joined as a co-mortgagor. In 1907 the mortgagors sued for cancellation of this deed, but entered into a compromise with the mortgagee, upon which a decree was passed maintaining the mortgage, but in a modified form. The mortgagee thereafter instituted a suit for enforcement of the mortgage as settled by the compromise decree.

[429] Held that, in view of the fact that the courts below found that the compromise was genuine and for the benefit of the family, it was not open to the defendants to raise the question of the genuineness of the original mortgage, and that, whether or not the original mortgage was a genuine transaction, the compromise decree gave rise to a debt which was binding on the descendants of the original mortgagor K. Madan Lal v. Kishan Singh (1) referred to.

[Fol. 24 I. C. 491.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

One Karya Pande and his brother's widow mortgaged the entire family property to the plaintiff. Two years later, the mortgagors brought a suit to set aside the mortgage on the ground that it was fraudulent, but compromised the suit with the plaintiff. The compromise provided :—

(a) that the mortgagors should be entitled to redeem on payment of Rs. 1,200 in any Jeth ;

(b) that the mortgagee was to remain in possession until redemption, and that if the mortgagors interfered, they would be liable in damages.

The defendants, who are the grandsons of Karya Pande, brought a suit for maintenance of their possession, alleging that the mortgage was fraudulent and collusive, but their suit was dismissed for default of appearance.

The plaintiff brought this suit alleging that she was wrongfully dispossessed in 1907. The suit was defended on the ground that the mortgage was fraudulent and collusive and that there was no necessity to borrow and the widow had no right to mortgage. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, giving effect to the defendants' pleas. The Judge in appeal reversed the decree and decreed the suit. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (for whom Munshi Iswar Saran) for the appellant :—

The court has found that the original mortgage was fictitious. There was no money advanced by the plaintiff on foot of that mortgage. The sons, therefore, were not bound to pay anything on account of the fictitious mortgage. The compromise in the suit made by the father by which he undertook a liability, was not in the interest of the sons. It was not a transaction for the benefit of the family and the father had no right to burden the family property with a liability for which no consideration had passed. The members of the family are not bound by the [430] transaction. A fraud was effected by the executant on the family, and the members of the family could not be bound by the fraud of the ancestor. They are bound by his acts only so far as they are family transactions.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, for the respondent :—

The suit of Karya Pande, to set aside the mortgage, was a suit on behalf of the family, and although the other members of the family were not parties to it in name, to all intents and purposes, they must be taken to be parties to it. The court below having found that the father was suing on behalf of the family as its head, it must be presumed that every member of the family was suing and that therefore the compromise was entered into on behalf of the family. There is no suggestion that there is anything fraudulent in the entering into the compromise. It was a compromise of doubtful rights. The question is not as to the liability of the sons to pay their father's debt but of paying debts under the compromise to which the defendants were themselves parties.

Munshi Iswar Saran was heard in reply.

RYVES and LYLE JJ. :—Karya Pande and Musammat Aureha Parain, his sister-in-law, executed an usufructuary mortgage of the zamindari share entered in their names, on the 13th of May, 1905, in favour of the plaintiff, for Rs. 1,799. It was agreed that the mortgagee should take the usufruct in lieu of interest and that the mortgage should be redeemed on payment of the mortgage money after a period of four years in any Baisakh. It is unnecessary to recapitulate the further covenants in the bond. In 1907, the mortgagors brought a suit against the mortgagee to cancel this mortgage on the ground that it was merely a paper transaction and no consideration passed. Karya Pande expressly brought this suit in his capacity of manager of a joint Hindu family. It is unnecessary to consider whether such a suit could have been maintained. The parties, however, arrived at a compromise the terms of which were that the amount then due on the mortgage, which was about Rs. 2,500, should be reduced to Rs. 1,200 and that the mortgage be redeemable in two years. A decree was passed in terms of the compromise, dated the 23rd of May, 1907. The plaintiff now sues to recover Rs. 1,200 due on the mortgage, as modified by the decree and for damages as stipulated in the [431] mortgage and decree, on the ground that she had been wrongly dispossessed by the defendants. Karya Pande is dead and the defendants are his grandsons and great grandsons and Musammat Aureha Parain. The main defence to the suit was that the mortgage of 1905 was a fraudulent transaction entered into to defeat creditors, and in particular, one Harpal Pande. Harpal Pande held a mortgage on some other property of Karya Pande, and in execution of a decree on his mortgage he sold the mortgaged property. As the proceeds of the sale were insufficient to satisfy the decree, he applied on the 28th of March, 1900, for a decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, to recover the balance of the decretal money. This mortgage in suit, it is alleged, was executed on the 13th of May, 1905, to defeat his claims. It was also pleaded that the suit and compromise of the 23rd of May, 1907, were collusive and therefor ineffectual, and, in any event, could not bind the defendants other than Musammat Aureha Parain, because they were not parties to it. The first court dismissed the suit on the ground that the mortgage of 1905 was entirely fictitious and was a mere paper transaction fraudlently entered into to defeat the creditors of the estate. On appeal the lower appellate court upheld this finding, but came to the conclusion that the compromise in 1907 was perfectly genuine and was entered into because Karya Pande was afraid that his suit would be dismissed. As the suit was instituted by him in a representative capacity as head of the family, the whole family, including minors, were bound by his act. It further found that the compromise was for the benefit of the family, and decreed the suit. In second appeal it has been argued on behalf of the defendants appellants that on the finding that the original mortgage was made without consideration no money passed and consequently there was no debt due from Karya Pande, and that, therefore, there was no pious duty on the part of the sons and grandsons involved in the matter, and, secondly, a compromise, which purported to modify a mere paper transaction, could create no liability.

In our opinion, this ingenious argument has no force, and we think that on the finding that the compromise was not collusive, but was geninue and made to benefit the family, the courts were [432] not entitled to go into the question as to whether the original mortgage was or was not fictitious.

According to the Full Bench ruling in Madan Lal v. Kishan Singh (1), the whole family, including the minors, were bound by the decree. But even assuming that it was open to the defendants appellants to reopen the question as to the validity of the original mortgage, and even assuming that the finding of the lower courts as to its nature is correct, the original mortgagors sued in 1907 to get rid of the danger to the family which their own fraudulent conduct had created. It is true that the mortgagee was equally fraudulent, but she was nevertheless entitled to maintain her possession. In pari delicto melior est positio defendentis. If the court had decided the case on this principle, the suit would have been dismissed and it would have been res judicata between the parties that there was a mortgage legally enforcible against the defendants appellants for an amount, then approximately, Rs. 2,500. In order to minimize the liability of the family, the mortgagors were probably well advised to make the best terms they could and compromise the case. Even if there was no loan nor debt in the beginning this decree created a debt for which there was good consideration, which the sons and grandsons are bound to discharge. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

BHAGWANT SINGH (Plaintiff) v. BHOLI SINGH (Defendant)*.
[23rd May, 1913.]

Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule I, articles 138 and 144—Execution of decree—Successive purchasers of same property—Suit by subsequent purchaser to recover from earlier purchaser.

Article 138 of the Limitation Act only applies to suits in which the auction purchaser is the plaintiff and the judgment-debtor, or some one claiming through him, is the defendant.

Ram Lakhan Rai v. Gajadhar Rai (1) and Khiroda Kanta Roy v. Krishna Das Laha (2) referred to.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of a single judge of the Court. The facts of the [433] case are stated in the judgment under appeal, which was as follows:—

"This was a suit for recovery of possession over certain immoveable property, and the only question for determination before me is one of limitation. In stating this question, I think it reasonable to accept everything which the court below have found against the conduct of the defendant upon the facts of the case. It appears that the defendant, holding three distinct mortgages on the property in suit, brought three distinct suits, one upon each mortgage. He obtained decrees and put the property up for sale three times, once upon each decree. He purchased himself at auction under two of his decrees on the 21st of February, 1898, and obtained formal possession on the 7th of September, 1898, and again on the 30th of January, 1899. In the mean time the same property had been put up for sale a third time on the 21st of April, 1898. The defendant appeared at that auction sale, said nothing about his previous purchase but actually bid for the property as if it still belonged to his judgment-debtor. He was out-bid by the plaintiff, who thus became auction-purchaser at this third sale held on the 21st of April, 1898. This sale was confirmed by the court on 30th of May, 1898 and the plaintiff obtained formal delivery of possession on the 15th of May, 1899. It must be remembered, therefore, that his judgment-debtor was still in possession at the date of the auction sale, but the decree-holder (the present defendant, as auction purchaser under his first two decrees, had himself obtained formal delivery of possession before the plaintiff did so. The present suit was brought on the first of June, 1910 and I have to determine which is the article of the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act (Act IX of 1908), by which that suit is governed. The suit as brought is one to which article 142 of the said schedule would apply, provided the plaintiff succeeded in establishing the necessary facts. What the plaintiff says is that he obtained actual and not merely formal possession on the 15th of May, 1899, but lost that possession some time in the month of July, 1899, owing to an adverse decision of the Revenue Courts. If these facts were established, the suit would be one for possession of immovable property when the plaintiff while in possession of the property, had been dispossessed; article 142 of the Indian Limitation Act would apply; the date of the origin of the cause of action would be the month of July, 1899, and the suit would be within time. In such a suit, however, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to satisfy the court that he was actually in possession within limitation. There is no finding in favour of the plaintiff by either of the courts below on this point, nor has either of them applied article 142 of the schedule, nor has either of them calculated the origin of the cause of action from the month of July, 1899. Both the courts below have held that the plaintiff has a cause of action dating from the 15th of May, 1899, the date on which formal delivery of possession to him took place under orders of the court. The learned Munsif himself does not expressly state what article of the limitation Act he proposes to apply; but the learned Subordinate Judge on first appeal has expressly applied article 144. This article cannot be applied unless the court is prepared to find that the suit is one for possession of immovable property not especially provided for under [434] any of the other articles of the schedule in question. This seems to me clearly impossible, because the suit as framed is one to which article 142 would apply, and it discloses facts which would make article 138 of the schedule applicable. The courts below have held that article 138, of the schedule is excluded by the principle of the ruling of this court in Narain Das v. Lalta Prasad (1). That ruling obviously does not exclude article 138, because the particular case then before the Court was decided without any determination of the question whether article 138 or article 144 would have applied to the facts then before the Court. By implication it seems to me that this ruling is entirely against the plaintiff; but I will refer to this point again presently. There are other authorities for holding that article 138 of the schedule would apply to the present suit as for instance, cases reported in I. L. R. 35 Bom. 452, and in I L.R. 17 Mad. 89. I come back, therefore, to what seems to me the one question really arguable, namely, whether or not the courts below should have found in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that he has made out a sufficient case for applying the article of Limitation Act on which his suit was actually based, namely, article 142. I do not think the case for the plaintiff can be put any higher than this, namely, that the court should accept his certificate of formal delivery of possession on the 15th of May, 1899, as prima facie sufficient proof that he obtained actual possession on that date. If this proposition can be affirmed, then it would not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he actually lost possession in the months of July following, or on any specific date; he could claim to have made out a good title, plus possession within twelve years of the date of the suit. Now it is on this very point that the ruling in Weekly Notes, 1899, already referred to, seems to me against the plaintiff. Applying the principle involved in that ruling to the facts of the present case, I hold that if the judgment-debtor had been in actual possession on the 15th of May, 1899, then the court would have been bound to accept the plaintiff's certificate as sufficient proof that the judgment-debtor was actually ousted from possession on that date, and that possession passed to the plaintiff The case is otherwise when the judgment-debtor was not in possession on the 15th of May, 1899, but another person was in possession as auction-purchaser under a previous sale As against such auction-purchaser, formal delivery of possession to the present plaintiff is not proof that he was actually ousted. Something has been said before me in argument as to the dishonesty of defendants' proceedings, and as to the question of estoppel. The considerations are quite irrelevant to the question of limitation. If the plaintiff had come into court within twelve years of the date of the confirmation of his auction sale, it may be that the courts below are perfectly right in holding that no sort of defence on the merits would have been open to the defendant, in view of his proceedings, and particularly in view of the fact that he was a bidder at the auction sale of the 21st of April, 1898. The whole point of the law of limitation is, however, that a defendant cannot be put to the defence of his title at all unless the plaintiff claims from the courts the relief to which he is entitled within what the Legislature has laid down to be a suitable time with reference to the facts of each particular case. I hold that the suit as framed is barred by article 142 of the [435] first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, because the plaintiff has failed to prove the ingredients necessary to bring his suit under the operation of that article. I hold that the facts disclosed are such that the suit would have been maintainable under article 138 of the same schedule if it had been filed two days earlier, but that it is barred under that article, because it was brought more than twelve years from the date of the confirmation of the auction sale. I hold that article 144 of the same schedule cannot be applied at all, because from any point of view the suit is one provided for by another article in the same schedule. I, therefore, accept this appeal, and setting aside the decrees of both the courts below, dismiss the suit with costs throughout."

RICHARDS, C.J., and BANERJI, J.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are a littile peculiar. It appears that the defendant obtained three mortgage decrees on foot of three separate mortgages against the property which the plaintiff now seeks to recover. There were three separate sales. The defendant himself purchased at two of the sales. He bid at the third sale, but he was out-bid by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was accordingly declared the auction-purchaser. The sale to the defendant was on the 21st of February, 1898; that to the plaintiff was on the 21st of April 1898. The defendant obtained either formal or actual possession on the 7th of November, 1898. The sale to the plaintiff was confirmed on the 30th of May, 1899. The present suit was not instituted until the 1st of June, 1910. In any view of the case, the plaintiff slept on his rights for nearly twelve years. The only question which had to be decided was one of limitation. It has been urged with great force in the present Letters Patent Appeal that article 144 of the Limitation Act is the article which should regulate the present suit. The learned Judge of this Court, in his decision against which the present Letters Patent Appeal has been preferred, held that article 138 applied. It is quite true that the plaintiff's suit is based on an auction purchase in execution of a decree; it is also true that at the date of sale to the plaintiff the judgment-debtor was in possession. At first sight it would appear as if article 138 applied. We are, however, inclined to think that article 138 only applies to suits in which the auction-purchaser is plaintiff, and the judgment-debtor, or some person claiming through [436] him, is defendant. [See Ram Lakhan Rai v. Gajadhar Rai (1) and also Khiroda Kanta Roy v. Krishna Das Laha (2).] The respondent meets this argument by saying that even assuming that article 144 is the article which applies to the circumstances of the present case, it has been found that he claims through the judgment-debtor and that therefore he is entitled to add to his own possession the possession of the judgment-debtor from the 30th of May, 1898. It is clear that if the defendant is so entitled to add this period, the claim would be time-barred. It is true the defendant claims through the judgment-debtor. He was an auction-purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interest and is in possession as such. It is, however, contended on behalf of the plaintiff, that having regard to the fact that the defendant allowed the property to be put up to sale a third time and bid at the sale himself, he ought not to be allowed to say that he claims through the judgment-debtor. Both the court of first instance and the lower appellate court placed considerable weight on the fact that the defendant bid at the auction sale at which the plaintiff was declared the purchaser. But no issue was framed as to whether or not the defendant is estopped from setting up the case that he claims through the judgment-debtor. It has not been explained how it was that the property came to be put up to sale on foot of each of the decrees, nor has it been shown how far the defendant was responsible for the property being so put up. All the decrees appear to have been put into execution about the same time, and it may have been that the court executing the decree was as much, or more, to blame than the defendant, in allowing the same property to be sold three times. Furthermore, it has not been found that the plaintiff was ignorant of the fact that two months before his purchase the property had been already sold and purchased by the defendant. If he knew all these facts it could hardly be said that he was misled by the fact that the defendant bid at the last auction sale. We think that before finally disposing of the appeal we should have a clear finding on this issue of estoppel. We therefore refer, under order XLI, rule 25, the following issue :—

[437] "Did the defendant by his act intentionally cause the plaintiff to believe that he did not already purchase the property himself, and that the property could be sold and a good title given under the decree in execution of which the property was sold to the plaintiff?"

Held that an acknowledgment of a debt to be a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, need not be addressed to the creditor, but may be made to some other person, as, e.g., by means of a deposition in court.

Held also that a statement in the form "the whole of Janki Prasad's mortgage money is owing," there being in existence at the time two mortgages held by Janki Prasad, must be taken to apply to both, in the absence of evidence indicating a different signification. Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (1) and Mylapore Iyasawmy Vyapoory Moodliar v. Yeo Kay (2) referred to.

[Appl. 46 I. C. 973=4 M L. J. 551.]

THIS was a suit on a mortgage bond, dated the 24th of January, 1892. It was executed by Shib Singh and Ajit Singh, two brothers, in favour of Janki Prasad, who was a member of a joint Hindu family. The bond was executed for Rs. 1,200. Defendants 12 to 14 were subsequent tranferees of the property. The suit was instituted on the 9th of July, 1910, against the executants and their sons and grandsons. But the subsequent transferees were not impleaded till the 14th of July, 1911, the application for bringing them on the record having been put in on some day in the preceding February. The transferees pleaded that the suit was barred against them, they having been impleaded long after the period [438] of grace allowed by the Limitation Act of 1908. The reply to this was that one Ram Dayal, through whom they derived their title, had admitted the mortgage in question so late as the 2nd of June, 1909. Ram Dayal was examined by the court in a suit in which he was defendant and there he had said that "the whole of Janki Prasad's mortgage money is owing." That was a suit by a third party to recover possession of property covered by the present mortgage from Ram Dayal, who had purchased it at an auction sale. It appeared that there were other mortgages in favour of Janki Prasad as well as in favour of his brother, Mathura Prasad, executed by these two brothers in conjunction with some other persons.

The Subordinate Judge held that the statement of Ram Dayal in the deposition of 1902, amounted to an admission and decreed the suit.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor (The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru with him), for the appellants.

There were four mortgages over this property in favour of Janki Prasad or his brother in which the defendants were interested. It was not clear which of these Ram Dayal was referring to when he made that statement. He was mixed up in the description he gave because it did not tally with particulars of any one of the mortgages. There was not present before his mind any particular document under which he thought himself liable. There was no specification of any kind. An acknowledgment must be a clear acknowledgment of a specific liability. Besides, it was not a voluntary acknowledgment. Ram Dayal was examined by the court, he was neither examined in chief nor cross-examined. There was no question at the time regarding any of these mortgages.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji and Pandit Rama Kant Malaviya with him), for the respondent.

The question was whether the acknowledgment fulfilled the requirements of section 19 of the Limitation Act. What was necessary to be seen was that the acknowledgment sufficed to identify the claim on the document under consideration. Looking to the depositions as a whole it was clear that Ram Dayal meant to say that the entire money due to Janki Prasad was unpaid.

[439] The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, in reply.

The law did not require any specification of property, but the meaning of the admission must be clear. It was held in a case by the Privy Council that the admission must be to the creditor himself; Mylapore Iyasawmy Vyapoory Moodliar v. Yeo Kay (1), and it was followed in Imam Ali v. Baij Nath Ram Sahu (2). But these decisions were departed from by the Privy Council in Maniram Seth v. Seth Rup Chand (3).

RICHARDS, C. J. and LYLE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit upon foot of a mortgage, dated the 24th of January, 1892. The court below has made a decree in the plaintiff's favour, but certain persons have preferred an appeal. They are purchasers of a portion of the property which the court below has ordered to be sold. The present suit was instituted on the 11th of July, 1910, but the appellants were not made parties to that suit until the 14th July, 1911. It will thus appear that the suit was barred against them unless something had happened which gave a fresh period of limitation. The allegation of the plaintiff was that there had been an acknowledgment by a predecessor in title of the appellants on the 2nd of June, 1902. The statement which is relied upon as an acknowledgment was made by one Ram Dayal in a suit brought against him and others for possession by an outsider. Being a party to the suit he was called and questioned by the Judge, and the statement he made was subsequently signed by him. In the course of his statement he said:—"The whole of Janki Prasad's mortgage money is owing." The contention of the appellants is that at that time there were two mortgages in favour of Janki Prasad and that the statement of Ram Dayal might just as well apply to one as the other and that therefore it is no sufficient acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act. If it could be made good that the statement might apply equally to one of two mortgages and did not apply to both, a great deal might be said for the present appeal. However, the statement of Ram Dayal must be taken in conjunction with the circumstances and the rest of the statement he made. It appears that on the 30th of October, 1888, two sets of persons made a mortgage in favour of one [440] Mathura Das, who was joint with Janki Prasad : one set were Brahmans and the other set Thakurs. This was a mortgage with possession. On the 8th of November, 1888, exactly the same persons made another mortgage of the same property in favour of the same person. On the 24th of January, 1892, another mortgage was made, but this time it was made by the Brahmans alone and of their share. But on the very same day the Thakurs made the mortgage now sued upon, of their share in the property. These mortgages were in favour of Janki Prasad. In effect these two last mortgages were one transaction and they were very similar to the other transaction of 1888 in which the Brahmans and Thakurs joined together. Reading the statement which Ram Dayal made as a whole, it is perfectly clear that he was referring to the two mortgages of the 24th of January, 1892, though he was probably unaware that the money was advanced on two documents instead of one.

It is quite clear that he was referring to the entire debt due to Janki Prasad because he refers to some members of each of the two sets of mortgagors though he does not name them all correctly.

It is next contended that the statement does not satisfy the provisions of section 19 of the Limitation Act, because the acknowledgment was not given to the creditor, and the case of Mylapore Iyaswamy Vyapoory Moodliar v. Yeo Kay (1) is cited. The explanation to section 19 of the Limitation Act expressly states that an acknowledgment may be addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right and in the case of Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (2) where the acknowledgment was made under analogous conditions, their Lordships of the Privy Council referring to the explanation to section 19, held that the acknowledgment was good and satisfied the conditions of the section.

Under these circumstances, we think that the view taken by the court below was correct and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ONE Umrao Singh in 1880 executed a mortgage of certain property in favour of the plaintiff's father. In 1910 the plaintiff instituted a suit for sale on the basis of this mortgage against Sanwal Singh, son of Angad Singh, one of the two sons of Umrao Singh, and alleged that, although there was, or had been, another son Mangal Singh, he had not been heard of for twenty-five years. In the written statement it was pleaded that Mangal Singh was alive, and was a necessary party to the suit.

The lower appellate court found that Mangal Singh was alive ; that he and Sanwal Singh were separate, and that the suit would not fail because Mangal Singh had not been impleaded, and decreed the plaintiff's claim against the property standing in the name of Sanwal Singh. The defendant thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Pandit Braj Nath Vyas, for the appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondent.

RYVES and LYLE, JJ:—This was a suit to recover Rs. 920, the principal and interest due on a mortgage executed by Umrao [442] Singh on the 12th of July, 1880, in favour of the plaintiff's father, by sale of the mortgaged property.

It was stated in the plaint that Umrao Singh, the mortgagor, died leaving two sons, Mangal Singh and Angad Singh. The plaint recites :—"Mangal Singh has not been heard of for a long time, that is, for about twenty-five years, and Angad Singh died childless. In the public khewat the names of Mangal Singh, who has not been heard of, and of Sanwal Singh, defendant, stand recorded in the column of the mortgagor against the property mortgaged. Besides Sanwal Singh, defendant, no other heir of Umrao Singh, principal mortgagor, and of Mangal Singh, who has not been heard of, is in existence." This suit was instituted on the 2nd of August, 1910. In the written statement it was stated that Mangal Singh was alive and was in the service of the Indore State, and that he was a necessary party to the suit and that the claim was bad for non-joinder of a necessary party. This written statement was filed on the 24th of November, 1910. The courts below have decreed the suit and have directed that the whole amount claimed should be recovered by the sale of the property entered in the name of Sanwal Singh, and have excluded the share standing in the name of Mangal Singh. The learned District Judge found, inter alia, (1) that Mangal Singh was alive, (2) that Mangal Singh and Sanwal Singh were separate, (3) that the suit should not be dismissed altogether because he had not been made a party.

Before us, in second appeal, two only of the pleas taken in the memorandum of appeal, have been pressed; first that on the finding that Mangal Singh was alive the whole suit should have been dismissed, as he had not been made a party, and secondly, that in any event, the half of the property recorded in Sanwal Singh's name ought not to have been made liable for more than half of the money claimed.

On the first point, reliance is placed on order XXXIV, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure and Gendan Lal v. Babu Ram (1). This case, however, does not apply, although some observations of the learned Judges and particularly those of Mr. JUSTICE KARAMAT HUSAIN are against the appellant. We do not think [443] order XXXIV, rule 1, really has any application in the present case. That rule requires all persons having an interest in the mortgaged security to be joined in the suit. Now this mortgage was time-barred long ago on the proper construction of the law of limitation as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

Twelve years, and not sixty years, as had been held in these provinces, was the period within which, ordinarily, such a suit should be instituted. The plaintiff's suit on this mortgage would have been time-barred, had not the Legistlature added section 31 to the Limitation Act. Under the provisions of that section the suit was in time up to the 8th of August, 1910. The plaint was filed only a few days before this date. The plaintiff stated then that he had no knowledge whatever of the existence of Mangal Singh and that was the reason why he was not made a party. By the time the written statement was filed, the claim against Mangal Singh was time-barred and the mortgage as against him and his property was extinguished. We do not think it was the duty of the plaintiff to bring on the record a person against whom no claim could be enforced in the suit. At the time of the trial of the suit there was no mortgage subsisting on the property of Mangal Singh. The only property which could be made liable for the mortgage money was the share in possession of Sanwal Singh. In this share Mangal Singh had no concern. He would not, therefore, seem to be a person having any interest in the subsisting mortgage security.

The question may be looked at from another point of view also. Order I, rule 9, provides that no suit shall be dismissed by reason of misjoinder or non-joinder of persons. That rule does not apply when a cause of action arises against a number of persons jointly, because in that case when one of such persons is eliminated, no cause of action subsists against the rest of them. If it does not subsist against all, it cannot subsist against any. In this case, however, the property has been divided, and portions of it are held separately by Mangal Singh and Sanwal Singh. No cause of action arises against them jointly, and the failure to implead Mangal Singh is no reason for dismissing the suit against Sanwal Singh.

[444] On the second point, reliance is placed on Imam Ali v. Baij Nath Ram Sahu (2). In that case the ruling of this Court in Jai Gobind v. Jas Ram (3) was dissented from. But this opinion, as stated on page 121 of the report in I. L. R. 33 Cal. has not been consistently adopted even in the Calcutta Court. In Hakim Lal v. Ram Lal (4), the ruling in Krishna Ayyar v. Muthukumarasawmiya Pillai (5), which supports us, was dissented from. In Haro Kumari v. Eastern Mortgage Company (6), however, the learned Judges considered the rulings in I. L R. 33 Calc., p. 613 and in I. L, R., 29 Mad., p. 217 and stated :—" We consider the rule laid down in the last mentioned case is correct." In Debendra Nath Sen v. Abdul Samad (1) MOOKERJI, J., who also delivered the judgment in I. L. R., 33 Cal., p. 613, referred, apparently with approval, to the ruling in I. L. R., 29 Mad., 217 and to the ruling in C. L. J., Vol. VII, p. 274, and stated, as reported at page 175 :—" The general rule unquestionably is that a mortgagee cannot be required, at the instance of a purchaser of a part of the premises, to apportion his mortgage-debt among the several parts into which the property has been divided and to look to each only for the proportionate share, unless circumstances have happened, the effect of which, in fact and in law, is to create a severance of the security." It seems, therefore, that the rule in I. L. R. 33 Cal., p. 613, was intended to govern the particular facts of that case on the point, and not to lay down any general rule. But, be that as it may, it seems to us that we should follow the ruling of this Court in A. W. N. 1898, p. 120, with which we entirely agree. It was laid down in that case that " if two properties are jointly mortgaged for the same debt, each of these properties is liable for the whole debt, and it is open to the mortgagee to proceed either against the whole of the mortgaged property or against a part only of such property." In this case, if the original mortgagor had been alive it would have been open to the plaintiff to bring to sale the whole or any part of the mortgaged property in the mortgagor's possession, and we do not see any reason why the right of the mortgagee should, in any way, be cut down [445] or prejudiced owing to the fact that after the mortgagor's death the mortgaged property was divided without the mortgagee's permission, into two separate shares and separately possessed by two persons. We, therefore, think that the decree of the lower court was right and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 110—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Requirements to be fulfilled before grant of certificate—Decree involving some question respecting property of the value of ten thousand rupees or upwards.

The value of the subject matter of the suit in the court of first instance was over Rs. 10,000, but the value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council was less than Rs. 10,000. On the other hand, the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council necessarily involved a decision as to the validity of an award which dealt with property of far greater value and which had been declared by the High Court to be invalid.

Held that the provisions of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure applied and a certificate should be granted. It was not necessary that at the time of presenting the application for leave to appeal there should be pending in a court a dispute respecting other property of the value of Rs. 10,000. Macfarlane v.

THIS was an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a judgment of RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J. reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut.

The facts, so far as they are material to the purposes of this report, are as follows :—

There was a dispute between the heirs of one Harnam Prasad as to the division of the family property. The family was possessed of property worth over Rs. 1,60,000, among which were certain mortgagee rights. The matter was referred to arbitration by the male heirs, and an award was made in 1893, by which all the property, including the mortgagee rights, was divided among the defendant, Musammat Kashmiro, the widow of the deceased, and certain persons who claimed to be members of the joint family with the deceased, the plaintiff being amongst them. The [446] lady was given an eight-anna share in the mortgagee rights, while the plaintiff was given four annas. The lady alone brought a suit upon the mortgage and recovered the money from the mortgagors. The plaintiff, thereupon, brought the present suit for recovery of his share (4 annas) in the mortgage money. The suit was valued at more than Rs. 10,000. The lower court gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 8,800. In appeal the High Court, holding that the award was fraudulent and collusive and that the family was a separate family, dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. An affidavit was filed in the High Court along with this application that the decree would affect property valued at Rs. 40,000 in possession of the plaintiff under the award.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, for the appellant :—

In this case although the valuation of this particular appeal is below Rs. 10,000, yet the amount indirectly involved is over Rs. 10,000, inasmuch as the whole award has been declared to be invalid and that involves property worth over Rs. 10,000. The question of the validity or invalidity of the award cannot be raised in another suit. It is, therefore, a fit case in which leave to appeal should be granted. He cited Andrew Macfarlane v. Francis Leclaire (1), Musammat Aliman v. Musammat Hasiba (2) and Ananda Chandra Bose v. Broughton (3).

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the respondent :—

The subject-matter in dispute means the property in dispute in the suit or appeal. Section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, refers to suits in existence and not to suits that may be brought in the future. Here the property in dispute was worth less than Rs. 10,000 and leave to appeal should not be granted; Banarsi Prasad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (4) and Hanuman Prasad v. Bhagwati Prasad (5).

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The value of the subject-matter of the suit in the court below exceeded Rs. 10,000, but that of the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council is Rs. 8,767-2-0. that is, below Rs. 10,000. The decree of this Court [447] reversed the decree of the court below. It is contended that, under section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the appellant has a right to appeal to His Majesty in Council, because the decree of this Court involves, directly or indirectly, a claim or question respecting property of value exceeding Rs. 10,000. The question in this case was whether an arbitration award was binding upon Musammat Kashmiro, one of the respondents to the proposed appeal. It is admitted that the award relates to property far exceeding Rs. 10,000 in value. This Court held, reversing the decision of the court below, that the award was not binding on the lady for reasons stated in this Court's judgment. It is the correctness of this decision which is challenged in the proposed appeal. If the decree of this Court becomes final, the question of the validity of the award will also become final as regards property other than the property in dispute in the present suit. It is, therefore, clear that the decree of this Court does involve a question relating to property of a value exceeding Rs. 10,000.

It is contended on behalf of the opposite party that unless there is at the time of the presentation of the application for leave to appeal a dispute pending in some court respecting other property of the value of Rs. 10,000, leave cannot be granted under section 110. We are unable to agree with this contention. The first paragraph of the section provides for cases in which the value of the subject-matter of the suit and of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty amounts to Rs. 10,000, or upwards. The second paragraph was intended to provide for cases in which, although the value of the subject-matter of the suit or subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty was below Rs. 10,000, the decree or final order involved, directly or indirectly, a claim or question to or respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000, or upwards. The paragraph to which we have referred is very wide and general, and it seems to us that it was clearly inserted in the section to meet a case like the present. The principle which underlies a question of this kind was discussed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Macfarlane v. Leclaire (1), and it seems to us that, in view of the opinion of their Lordships in that case, the second paragraph of section 596 [448] of the Code of 1882, which corresponds to section 110 of the present Code, was enacted. A similar view to that held by us appears to have been taken by the Calcutta High Court in Musammat Aliman v. Musammat Hasila (2) and Ananda Chandra Bose v. Broughton (3). As in the present case the decree involves a question respecting property of value exceeding Rs. 10,000, and as the decision of the court below was reversed by this Court, the case, in our opinion, fulfils the requirements of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and we so certify.

Leave granted.

Act No. X of 1865 (Indian Succession Act), section 244—Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 2—Will—Probate—Application for probate dismissed—"Decree"—"Order"—Appeal.

Held that the order of a District Judge granting or refusing probate of a will on an application made under the provisions of section 244 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, is a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and appealable as such.

Held also that the court fee payable on such an appeal is Rs. 10 under article 17, clause vi, of the second schedule to the Court Fees Act, 1870.

Umrao Chand v. Bindraban Chand (1), Esoof Hasshim Dooply v. Fatima Bibi (2) and Sheikh Azim v. Chandra Nath Namdas (3) referred to.

THIS was an application in the court of the District Judge of Saharanpur for probate of the will of Miss Garnett Orme, who died at the Savoy Hotel, Mussoorie, on the 18th of September, 1911. The applicant was the executrix named in the will. The granting of probate was resisted by the brother of the testatrix upon various grounds, and on the 12th of October, 1912, the District Judge dismissed the application. The applicant appealed to the High Court, framing her appeal as a first appeal from order and paying a court fee of Rs. 2. Before the appeal came on for hearing, the opposite party raised a preliminary objection that the District Judge's decision amounted to a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure and should [449] have been appealed from as such. The case was accordingly put up for the hearing of this objection.

Messrs. G. P. Boys and G. W. Dillon, for the respondent.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the appellant.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—This appeal has been filed as a first appeal from order. It is objected that it is really a first appeal from decree, and that the petition of appeal does not bear the full court fee stamp necessary under the law. The appeal is one from an order of the District Judge refusing to grant letters of administration with a copy of the will annexed to the estate of the late Miss Francis Mary Garnett Orme. The estate is roughly valued at Rs. 17,000. On behalf of the appellant it is urged that under section 263 of the Indian Succession Act the decision of the court below is termed an order and that it has been the regular practice of this Court to treat such appeals as first appeals from orders. The point is really covered by decisions. Section 261 of the Succession Act says as follows:—"In any case before the District Judge in which there is contention, the proceedings shall take, as nearly as may be, the form of a regular suit, according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which the petitioner for probate or letters of administration, as the case may be, shall be the plaintiff, and the person who may have appeared as aforesaid to oppose the grant shall be the defendant". So that it is quite clear that the proceeding in the court below was actually in the form of a civil suit in which under the above section the person applying for the letters of administration was the plaintiff and the person who opposed the grant was the defendant. In the case of Umrao Chand v. Bindraban Chand (1) the point was decided, though for another purpose, and it was clearly laid down that the order contemplated under section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act was a decree. Section 86 of the Probate Act corresponds in every way with section 263 of the Succession Act, just as section 83 of the Probate Act corresponds with section 261 of the Succession Act. The point was also considered and decided by the Calcutta High Court in Esoof Hasshim Dooply v. Fatima Bibi (2) and in Sheik Azim v. Chandra Nath Namdas (3). In so far as the practice of this [450] Court is concerned, appeals from decisions of a single Judge of this Court under the Probate and Administration Act have been treated as appeals from decrees, whatever may have been the practice in respect to appeals in similar cases from the decisions of the District Judges. We have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the present appeal is a first appeal from decree.

As regards court fees, we have little hesitation in holding that the court fee payable is rupees ten under article 17, clause vi, Schedule II, of the Court Fees Act. The subject matter in dispute is in our opinion impossible to estimate at a money value. Therefore the above article will apply. A court fee of rupees two has already been paid. Therefore there is a deficiency of Court fee in respect of rupees eight only. As the appellant has been allowed time up to the 4th August, 1913, within which to deposit security for costs of the respondent, we allow her time up to that date to make good the deficiency in court fees.

MAY 26.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 450=20 I. C. 497=11 A. L. J. 659.

THE facts of this case were shortly as follows:—

By an election which took place on the 18th of March, 1912, Babu Raghunandan Prasad was returned as a duly elected member for Ward 7 of the Bareilly Municipality. The [451] validity of the election was questioned on various grounds by Lala Khunni Lal, one of the rival candidates, by a petition in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly. That court held that the election of Babu Raghunandan Prasad, defendant was valid. From that decision the petitioner appealed to the District Judge of Bareilly, praying for a declaration that the election was void. That court, on a preliminary objection on behalf of the opposite party, held that no appeal lay from an order on an election petition. The petitioner appealed.

Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the appellant, contended that the decree of the court of first instance was appealable and that the court below was wrong in holding that no appeal lay. Section 96 of the Code of Civil Procedure gave a right of appeal from every decree, unless such appeal was barred by any special provision of law. The order passed by the first court, being a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code and there being no provision in the election rules forbidding a right of appeal, the decree so passed was appealable as such under section 96. The lower appellate court was wrong in holding that the hearing and decision of a petition contesting an election was not the hearing and decision of a suit and that the proceedings in the trial of such a petition were miscellaneous proceedings. The word 'suit' was not defined in the Code of Civil Procedure, but section 26 provided that a suit should be commenced with a plaint and that the contents of the plaint were to be in accordance with the provisions of order VII, rule 1, and those requirements had been complied with in the plaint in the present case, which went by the name of an election petition. In Gur Charan Das v. Har Sarup (1) it was held that the competent court, referred to in rule 42, was a Civil Court. The suit being declared to be of a civil nature, the final order passed in that suit was a decree and was as such appealable as a decree of the Civil Court. He further pointed out that second appeals had been presented and heard in this Court against orders passed on election petition; Nawab Khan v. Muhammad Zamin (2), Gur Charan Das v. Har Sarup (1) and Raghunandan Prasad v. Shco Prasad (3).

[452] The fact that the plaint in the present case was better known by the term 'election' petition did not alter the character of the proceedings based on such petition. Plaints were generally termed petitions of plaint and so also were appeals called petitions of appeals.

He also submitted that the matter was a very important one and was not quite free from doubt owing to the obscure language used in rule 42 of the election rules. The old election rules clearly provided that election suits were to be heard and decided by the Magistrate of the District; but the new rules introduced a change and authorized the Civil Courts to hear such applications. The procedure in the matter had by no means been uniform, and in the present case it had to be seen what result would follow from a consideration of rule 42 along with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. In the circumstances, the present suit was one of a civil nature, and as such was triable only by a Civil Court; the final order passed thereon was a decree, and, there being no provision anywhere forbidding a right of appeal from such decree, was appealable.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondent, argued that election petitions were tried in England by specially constituted courts, whose decisions were final, except that the court had power to reserve certain questions as to admissibility of evidence for the consideration of the High Court. He referred to Halsbury's "Laws of England," Vol. 12, pp. 486, 488, 408, 460. He further urged that, as a matter of public policy, the litigations based on election petitions should not have a long course and a speedy determination of the matter and its finality should be enforced.

Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala was heard in reply.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—This is a second appeal arising out of an election petition. The election petition was presented under rule 42 (1) made by the Local Government under section 187 (1), clause (h), of the Municipalities Act. It was filed in the court of the officiating Subordinate Judge of Bareilly and it was dismissed. The petitioner appealed to the District Judge, who, relying upon the ruling in Sundar Lal v. Muhammad Faiq (1), held that no appeal lay to him, as the decision of the first court was an order and not a decree, and [453] there was nothing in law which gave the petitioner a right of appeal against the order of the first court. The petitioner has come up in second appeal, and a plea is urged that the decision of the first court is a decree within the definition thereof in section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure and therefore an appeal would lie therefrom. The decision of the question really depends upon the answer to another question—Was or was not the proceeding in the court of first instance a suit within the meaning of the word in section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure?

Under the Municipalities Act, section 187 (1), sub-section (h), the Local Government has power to frame rules consistent with the Act and applicable to all or any municipalities generally for regulating all elections under the Act. Under the former Municipalities Act, under the rules framed by the Government thereunder regulating elections, an election petition had to be filed in the court of the District Magistrate, and his decision thereon was final. When the draft rules under the present Act were published, they contained the same provisions, but when they were considered, the power of the District Magistrate to hear election petitions was removed and the rule was cast in the present rules as follows:—"The validity of an election, made in accordance with these rules, shall not be questioned except by a petition presented to a competent court within 15 days after the day on which the election was held by a person or persons enrolled in the municipal electoral roll." It is quite clear, therefore, that the petitioner in the present case presented his petition to the competent court under the above mentioned rule. It has been held in this Court that the competent court means a court of civil jurisdiction, as the question which arises is neither a criminal nor a revenue matter (2). Civil Courts have to do with a number of miscellaneous matters under special Acts which empower Civil Courts in certain circumstances to pass certain orders. Orders passed under those Acts are only appealable in so far as provision is made for appeals in the Acts themselves. They are orders which are not dealt with by the Code of Civil Procedure, and they are not decrees, as they are not passed in the course of suits. In the present instance, the action taken by the Civil Court is taken in pursuance of the powers granted under the rules passed by [454] Government under section 187 of the Municipalities Act. Neither the Act nor the rules make any provision whatsoever for any appeal from an order which the competent court may pass on an election petition, and unless it can be established that the orders passed amount to decrees, it is quite clear that no appeal lay to the District Judge. In our opinion, an order passed on an election petition in the circumstances of the present case is not an order passed in a suit and does not amount to a decree, and, in the absence of any special provision, no appeal lies therefrom. The question was considered at considerable length in Sundar Lal v. Muhammad Faiq (1). Though appeals have been filed in this Court and decided, the present question was not raised nor decided. That does not prevent it being raised now and decided as between the parties to the present appeal. The case of Raghunandan Prasad v. Sheo Prasad (2) was not an appeal from an order passed on an election petition. An election had been held and an election petition had been presented to the District Magistrate and rejected. The suit was brought by the plaintiff in the court of the Subordinate Judge praying for a declaration that he had been elected by a majority of lawful votes, and only in the alternative for a declaration that the election was void, having been held under rules which had been cancelled. In Sobhapat Singh v. Abdul Ghafur (3) a candidate who had been elected had his election set aside under the rules made under the Bengal Act of 1884 by the authority of the District Magistrate, who there determined the validity of the election. Thereupon a suit was brought in the Civil Court by the person whose election had been set aside for a declaration of his right to vote and to stand as a candidate and for a declaration that he had been duly elected. It was there held that the suit, so far as it related to the declaration that he had a right to vote and to stand as a candidate, was of a civil nature and would lie in the Civil Court. It was further held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration that his election was good, and that he was only entitled to a declaration that he was entitled to vote and to stand as a candidate for election.

[455] In England in cases of municipal elections, a special court is constituted by Statute for the trial of municipal election petitions. It consists of a single commissioner, whose decision is final. He has the power to reserve a question of law as to admissibility of evidence or otherwise for consideration of the High Court, if in his opinion the question requires such consideration. It seems to us that the policy of the law has all along been finality of the decision of the court, commissioner or other special officer empowered to hear election petitions. It seems to us unnecessary to discuss the reasons for such a policy. They appear to us to be obvious. Some awkward and absurd results are mentioned in the ruling mentioned above, to wit, Sundar Lal v. Muhammad Faiq (1). We agree with this decision in holding that the order passed on an election petition is not a decree and that no provision has been made for appeal from such order. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[27th May, 1913.]

Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule II, article 75—Bond—Option of suing for whole amount due on default of payment of instalments—Limitation.

A bond payable by instalments gave to the creditor the option of suing for the whole amount due on default in payment of any instalment or of suing for the instalments separately. Two instalments were paid; the third was not, and more than six years after default in payment of this instalment, nothing further having been paid on the bond, the creditor sued to recover the whole amount due stating that the cause of action arose on the date when the third instalment became due.

Held that the suit was time-barred. Ajudhia v. Kunjal (1) distinguished.

[Dist. 37 All. 400; Fol. 63 I. C. 655; Ref. 60 I. C. 931=20 A. L. J. 819.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

The appellant executed an instalment bond in favour of the plaintiff respondent on the 7th of July, 1904. The sum borrowed was Rs. 600, which, with Rs. 80 as interests the defendant promised to pay by six-monthly instalments of Rs. 75, in four and a half years [456] The bond provided that in case of default of payment of any instalment, the creditors would be entitled to realize either the whole money with interest at 6 per cent. per annum or those instalments which remained unpaid. The defendant paid the first two instalments on the due dates. The third instalment, which fell due on 7th of January, 1906, was not paid. On the 17th of August, 1912, the plaintiffs brought their suit for the recovery of Rs. 530, principal and Rs. 223-2-0, interest, alleging that the cause of action for the suit accrued on the 7th of January, 1906, the date on which the breach of promise was made and also on the 7th of January, 1909, the date of payment of the last instalment. The defendant admitted the execution of the deed and the receipt of consideration, but pleaded limitation as a bar to the suit. The Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that it was brought beyond the period of limitation allowed by law. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the suit was not time-barred and remanded the case to the first court for decision of the case on its merits. The defendant appealed.

Pandit Shiam Krishna Dar, for the appellant :—

The only question in this case was whether the suit, as brought, was barred by limitation. The bond being an instalment bond with a provision for the bringing of a suit for the whole amount on default of payment of any instalment, article 75, read with article 116, would apply. The first default was made on the 7th of January, 1906, and time began to run from that date for a suit on that bond. It was not open to the creditors to control the accrual of the cause of action which was laid down by the Limitation Act, and the fact that they had an option to sue made no difference so far as the running of time was concerned. The only way in which they could avoid limitation running from the date of default of the first instalment was by proving waiver of the right to sue for the whole amount of the bond. In the present case, the plaintiffs' claim was to enforce the condition which entitled them to recover the whole amount and not to plead waiver. The present suit having been brought on the 17th of August, 1912, that is, more than six years after the accrual of the cause of action, was therefore barred by [457] time; Sheo Narain v. Ram Din (1), Jadab Chandra Bakshi v. Bhairab Chandra Chuckerbutty (2), Rai Shitab Chand Nahar v. Hyder Mollah (3). The case of Ajudhia v. Kunjal (4) was a case in which the claim was brought to recover the last three instalments that were due on a bond and not the whole amount. In that case it appears to have been assumed that the plaintiffs had waived their right to sue for the whole amount. But in the present case, the plaintiffs took their stand upon the special provision in the bond and sought to enforce that right. In fact, the plaintiffs themselves stated in their plaint that the cause of action to sue arose on the 7th of January, 1906, the date on which the first default was made.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (for The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the respondent :—

The bond gave the creditors an option to sue, but they were not bound to sue. It was open to them to exercise that option or not. Many instalments, due under the bond, were within time. Only a few earlier ones might be said to have been barred. There was no reason why the whole suit should have been dismissed and the plaintiffs not allowed to recover those instalments which were admittedly within time. There was no question of waiver in a case like this. He cited Ajudhia v. Kunjal (4), Maharaja of Benares v. Nand Ram (5) and Shankar Prasad v. Jalpa Prasad (6).

Pandit Shiam Krishna Dar was not heard in reply.

TUDBALL and MAHAMMAD RAFIQ JJ. :—This is a defendent's appeal and arises out of a suit on an instalment bond, dated the 7th of July, 1904, for a sum of Rs. 680 as consideration, Rs. 600 being the actual amount of the loan and Rs. 80 being the interest thereon. The whole was repayable in 4½ years in equal instalments of Rs. 75, payable every six months. There was a condition in the bond that if any instalment remained unpaid on the due date, then the creditor would be entitled to recover the whole sum at once with interest or that he might sue for each instalment as it fell due and remained unpaid. The first two instalments were paid on the due dates. The third instalment was due on the 17th of January, 1906. Neither this nor any of the subsequent [458] instalments were paid. On the 17th of August, 1912, i.e., six years and seven months after the 7th of January, 1906, the plaintiff brought the present suit. An examination of his plaint would show that he sued to recover the full amount which was due on the 7th of January, 1906, together with interest at the stipulated rate, and which fell due by reason of the default of the 7th of January, 1906, i.e., Rs. 530, principal, plus Rs. 223-2, interest. In his plaint he distinctly states that the cause of action for the suit accrued on the 7th of January, 1906. It is to be noted that he does not sue for each of the instalments, which fell due successively every six months together with interest on each instalment from its due date. He is clearly electing to take one of the two options given him by the bond, viz., that one which enabled him to recover the full amount of the debt due by reason of the default in one instalment.

The court of first instance dismissed the suit as time-barred, under articles 75 and 120 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. The court below, relying mainly on the decision of Ajudhia v. Kunjal (1), held that the suit was not barred by limitation and remanded it to the court of first instance for decision on the merits. The defendant has come here on second appeal, and it is strongly urged, first, that the ruling referred to does not apply, and secondly, that in view of article 75 of the Limitation Act, the suit is clearly barred. In our opinion, the appeal must succeed. Both under the terms of this bond as well as in law, when the debtor failed to pay the instalment on the 7th of January, 1906, it was open to the creditor either to claim the whole of the debt or two waive that right and take the other option of recovering the instalments. Article 75 distinctly states that the period of limitation begins to run when the default is made, unless where the payee waives his right based on the provision, and then when fresh default is made in respect of which there is no such waiver. It is perfectly clear from the plaint itself that the plaintiffs have not waived that right, which entitled them to recover the whole of the balance due by reason of the default of the 7th of January, 1906. In fact, they take their stand upon that provision and seek to enforce their right. The existence of [459] a waiver is distinctly negatived by the plaint, which states that the right accrued on the 7th of January, 1906. To enforce that right they had six years from that date. The present suit has been brought beyond the period of limitation allowed by law. In regard to the ruling in Ajudhia v. Kunjal (1), an examination thereof shows clearly that it cannot apply to the facts of the present case. That suit was brought to recover the last three of the instalments that were due under that bond and not the whole amount due by reason of a default in payment of an instalment It appears to have been proved or assumed that the plaintiffs had forborne to sue, in other words, had waived their rights based on the special provision of the bond and were enforcing their rights in respect of the instalments that were due and had not been paid. In the present case, the facts are directly the contrary. The claim is to enforce the condition which entitled the creditor to recover the whole amount due by reason of the default in payment of one instalment on the 7th of January, 1906. In our opinion, the suit is clearly barred under the provisions of the above-mentioned articles. We allow the appeal, set aside the order of the court below and restore the decree of the court of first instance with costs.

[460] THE facts of the case are briefly, as follows:—

On the death of the mutawalli of a certain waqf the defendant No. 1 took possession of the waqf property as mutawalli and got his name entered in the revenue papers. The plaintiff, claiming that he was, under the will of the creator of the waqf, the rightful mutawalli, brought a suit in the Subordinate Judge's court for a declaration to that effect and for possession of the property. The Subordinate Judge was opinion that the suit fell within the scope of section 92, Civil Procedure Code, and dismissed it as being beyond his jurisdiction. The plaintiff appealed.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (for Babu Jogindro Nath Chaudhri with him Mr. S. A. Haider) for the appellant :—

The suit does not fall within section 92, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff does not seek to be appointed a mutawalli. He says that he is the mutawalli and that the defendant has no title. The suit is for declaration and possession; it does not claim any of the reliefs contemplated by section 92. The suit is not one for the removal of a trustee ; for, according to the plaintiff, the defendant is not a trustee at all, but a person without right, a mere trespasser. Section 92, contemplates a suit by two or more members of the public who are interested in the welfare of the trust but have no other individual rights whatsoever in it. Such a suit would not be affected in any way if any other members of the public, having an interest in the trust, were to be substituted for the original plaintiffs. The present suit does not deal with a public right ; it has to determine only a private right. The question is between two individuals, as to which of them is entitled, under the constitution of the trust, to the office of mutawalli. The matter in issue is a private right, peculiar to the individual claiming it.

I rely on the following cases:—Budree Das Mukim v. Chooni Lal Johurry (1) Manijan Bibee v. Khadem Hossein (2) Ghelabhai Gavrishankar v. Uderam Icharam (3) and Sir Dinsha Manekji Petit v. Sir Jamsetji Jijibhai (4). The case relied on by the lower court, namely, Muhammad Ibrahim Khan v. Ahmad Said Khan, (5) has no bearing on the present case. The only [461] point decided by it is that the selection of a trustee of a public trust is not a matter which can be referred to arbitration.

The Hon'ble Mr. Abdul Raoof (for Maulvi Ghulam Mujtaba; with him the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the respondents:—

The suit, although not brought in that form, is virtually one for the appointment of a new trustee, and falls within clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 92. The question raised in the suit is whether the plaintiff or the defendant No. 1 should be appointed mutawalli to succeed to the last incumbent; and until the question is decided in favour of the plaintiff by a competent court he has no right to describe himself as being the mutawalli. His description of himself as being such, and of the defendant No. 1 as being a trespasser, cannot alter the real nature of the suit and take it out of the scope of section 92. The present case is covered by the ruling in Muhammad Ibrahim Khan v. Ahmad Sayid Khan (5). It is not necessary for me to go to the length of contending that no one can be a mutawalli unless and until he has been appointed by the District Court; my submission is that when there is a dispute between rival claimants to the office of mutawalli then it is only the court of principal civil jurisdiction that can decide the dispute, and make the appointment. That is the basis of the ruling in the case cited. For, if an ordinary civil court could take cognizance of such a dispute, then it could also delegate its powers to arbitrators and the matter could be decided by arbitration; which is a conclusion directly opposed to that ruling, which decides that it is because only a court of special jurisdiction can take cognizance of such disputes that those disputes cannot be referred to arbitration; Sayid Ali v. Ali Jan (6).

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal was not heard in reply.

BANERJI and RYVES JJ.:—This was a suit brought by the plaintiff in the court of the Subordinate Judge of Moradabad for a declaration that he was entitled to the office of mutawalli of the trust property in suit, under the will of the founder of the waqf as against defendant No. 1, and for possession of the waqf property by the ejectment of defendant No. 1. The last mutawalli, Nawab Abdul Karim Khan, died on the 31st of August, 1908. On [462] the death of Nawab Abdul Karim Khan, defendant No. 1 applied in the Revenue Court for the entry of his name in respect of the endowed villages. The present plaintiff and others entered objections, but the Revenue Court decided in favour of defendant No. 1, and an appeal against that decision was dismissed by the Commissioner. A dispute had arisen as to who was entitled to the office of mutawalli, and the contending parties referred the matter to arbitrators who made an award in favour of Nawab Muhammad Ibrahim Khan. Muhammad Ibrahim Khan applied to file the award in court. That application was disallowed and the appeal from that order to this Court was dismissed on the 1st of April, 1910. Subsequently, this suit was instituted by the present plaintiff, Nawab Abdul Majid Khan. Various defences were raised and several issues were framed, but the only point decided was that the suit as brought came within the scope of section 92 of the present Code of Civil Procedure and was, therefore, beyond the jurisdiction of the court. The suit was accordingly dismissed. Hence this appeal. The only question to be decided in this appeal is whether section 92 applies or not. In our opinion, the scope and application of section 92 is very limited in character. In the first place it enables, by sub-section (1), the Advocate-general, or two or more persons having an interest in a trust created for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature, to bring a suit in the principal civil court of original jurisdiction or in any other court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the trust is situate, where there has been an alleged breach of such trust or where the direction of the court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust and then only to obtain a decree of one or more of the kinds specified in the section. Sub-section (2) of that section enacts that, save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act of 1863, no suit, claiming any reliefs specified in sub-section (1), shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to, except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section. The suit contemplated by the section is one brought in the interest of the public, through the Advocate-General, or of a section of the public or community interested in a particular public trust. through two [463] or more of its members with the previous sanction in writing of the Advocate-General, and does not apply to a suit brought by an individual to enforce his personal rights. In Budree Das Mukim v. Chooni Lal Johurry (1) WOODROFFE, J., stated :— "The suit contemplated by the section (i.e., section 539 of the old Civil Procedure Code), is one of a representative character. It is obvious that the Advocate General, Collector or other public officer can and do sue only as representing the public, and if, instead of these public officers, two or more persons having an interest in the trust sue with their consent, they so sue under a warrant to represent the public as the objects of the trust. See Lakshmandas Ragunathdas v. Jugalkishore (2). It follows from this that when a person or persons sue, not to establish the general rights of the public of which they are member or members, but to remedy a particular infringement of their own individual right, the suit is not within or need not be brought under the section." And further on he says :—"In my opinion the present suit, so far as it is brought by the plaintiffs in their individual capacity as trustees to enforce their individual claim to be such trustees of the temple in suit, is not within the scope of the section." In Ghelabhai Gavrishankar v. Uderam Icharam (3) the plaintiff sought to eject the defendants as trespassers and prayed for possession of the trust property and for the appointment of a trustee by the court, for the settlement of a scheme for the administration of the trust and for such other reliefs as the court might see fit to grant. The court held that, so far as it was a suit to eject the trespasser from property which is the subject of a public religious trust, section 539 of the old Civil Procedure Code did not apply, and that the suit rightly lay in the Subordinate Judge's court. On behalf of the respondent, great stress was laid on the case of Muhammad Ibrahim Khan v. Ahmad Said Khan (4). Now the only point decided in this case is that the right to succeed to the trusteeship of waqf property is not a right which can be settled by a reference to arbitration. Lord HALSBURY, L. C., in Quinn v. Leatham (1), is reported to have said at page 506 that "a case is only an authority for what it [464] actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it." This case is therefore, not an authority on the question which is now before us. The case of Saiyid Ali v. Ali Jan (2) is also clearly distinguishable. In that case the mutawalli had been appointed by the District Judge, and it was therefore held that, as it was a suit for the removal of a duly appointed mutawalli, it could only be brought in conformity with the provisions of section 92. In this case, the plaintiff says that he is the rightful mutawalli and that defendant No. 1 is wrongfully in possession of the waqf property. He does not ask for any of the reliefs specified in section 92, He is not suing on behalf of the public or of any section of the public but merely as an individual to enforce his own alleged individual rights.

In our opinion, such a suit doss not come within section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and is, therefore, within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge. We, therefore, allow the appeal, and, setting aside the decree of the lower court, remand the case to that court, under order XLI, rule 23, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number and proceed to determine it on the merits. Costs here, and in the court below, will abide the result.

Appeal allowed and cause remanded.

against Karna in the revenue court and had him ejected. Thereupon Karna brought the present suit in a civil court, asking for a declaration that the surrender of his holding by Dharam Jit to the zamindar was not binding upon him, the plaintiff. The court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree, and this decree was affirmed by the lower appellate court. The zamindar thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondent.

BANERJI and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—Dharam Jit, an occupancy tenant, made a usufructuary mortgage of his holding to the plaintiff, Karna, on the 16th of April, 1901. Dharam Jit subsequently surrendered his holding to the zamindar, Jotshi Shiva Prakash, in June or July, 1910. Shiva Prakash brought a suit in the Revenue court for ejectment of Karna and obtained a decree for ejectment on the 29th of November, 1910. Meanwhile on the 12th of September, 1910, Karna brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for a declaration that the surrender of his holding by Dharam Jit was not binding on him, the plaintiff.

The court of first instance granted the plaintiff a decree, and this decree has been affirmed by the lower appellate court. In our judgment, the decisions of both the courts below are incorrect. The Revenue Court having made a decree for ejectment, and this decree having been carried into effect and the plaintiff having been ejected, the present suit is, in our opinion, not maintainable. The decree of the Revenue Court is binding on the parties and any decree made in this suit would be wholly nugatory. The point is covered by authority, the latest reported case on the subject being Ram Devi Kuari v. Bindesri Upadhya (1). The judgment of the learned Judge who decided that case was affirmed on appeal under the Letters Patent (2). In this judgment all the authorities on the point are collected, and we are of opinion that in view of the decision in that case and of some of the cases on [466] which it is based, this appeal must prevail and the plaintiff's suit must fail. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

38 A. 466=14 A. L. J. 678 =20 I. C. 335

THE facts out of which this appeal arose were as follows:—

One Musammat Parbati, a Hindu widow, wished to construct a temple and a well on a portion of the property of her late husband. She came to court on the allegation that the defendants obstructed her in carrying out the work and prayed for an injunction restraining them from interference. Her suit was decreed by the court of first instance. The defendants appealed to the District Judge. While the appeal was pending, Musammat Parbati became a convert to Muhammadanism and was married to a Muhammadan. Her mother-in-law, the respondent to the present appeal, put in an application to the District Judge that Musammat Parbati having been converted to Muhammadanism, her own name may be substituted in her place as a respondent in the appeal. An application was also put in by Musammat Parbati, praying that her suit be dismissed and the appeal of the defendants be allowed. The defendants put in an application objecting to the claim of Musammat Nirma, the mother-in-law of Musammat Parbati, on the ground that Musammat Parbati having withdrawn her suit, her mother-in-law had no status in law to carry it on. [467] The District Judge allowed the mother-in-law to be brought on the record in place of Musammat Parbati, holding that Musammat Parbati must be deemed to have forfeited her rights and that the succession had opened up in favour of the mother-in-law. The defendants appealed.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the appellants:—

Two enactments of the Legislature have to be considered. The first is Act XXI of 1850. Parbati was a Hindu widow, she changed her religion and, so far as the provisions of that Act went, she could not be deprived of her rights to the property. The latest case on the point is Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3). There was an earlier case Bhagwant Singh v. Kallu (4). The same view is expressed by Ghosh in his Hindu Law, pages 219 and 220. It was true that Mayne dissented from that view; page 80 (7th edition.) He also disapproved of the decision in 11 All. 100. The second enactment was the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act (XV of 1856). That Act did not apply. The lower court was wrong in holding that it did. It applied to Hindu widows who remarried as Hindus. The lady in this case had become a Muhammadan before her second marriage. Section 6 of the Act made the whole thing clear and showed what the Legislature meant. The case of Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (2) is against this contention, but the judgement of PRINSEP, J., is the correct exposition of the law on the subject. The lady in that case remained a Hindu up to the time of her marriage.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the respondent:—

The question had to be considered with reference to the peculiar position of a Hindu widow. She was a life-tenant and something more, she held the life-estate and protected the reversion. The two were kept distinctly in view by the law. As soon as she did anything to the reversion, her acts could be challenged. The reversioner could bring a suit. Act XXI of 1850 protected only the life-interest of the widow. The object of the Act was to protect only the interest which she had in the property. The right to protect the reversion had devolved on the respondent. The application for substitution of names could be made under order [468] XXII, rule 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure. So far as the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act went, it referred to widows who took the estate as Hindu widows. It could not be construed to mean widows who were Hindus at the time of remarriage. Every Act had to be interpreted to give it a reasonable meaning. Otherwise it would be open to this anomaly that a widow would forfeit her estate if she married a Hindu, but if she married a non-Hindu she would keep it. The Act did contemplate the conversion of widows and it purposely used the expression 'any widow' instead of 'Hindu widow' in section 2. The adjective 'Hindu' was used in sections 3 and 6 and not in section 2. This distinction was significant. It was not the conversion that lost her the estate but the remarriage.

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises under the following circumstances. One Musammat Parbati, the widow of one Ganga Ram, who was a Hindu, instituted a suit claiming that she, in exercise of her legal rights, wished to make a well, and build a temple on a portion of the property in the possession of which she was as a Hindu widow. She alleged that the defendants to the suit were preventing her from exercising her legal rights and she claimed an injunction to restrain them. The plaintiff got a decree in the court of first instance. The defendant appealed. While the appeal was pending, Musammat Parbati became a convert to Muhammadanism and married one Wali Muhammad. She then put in a petition stating that she no longer wished to prosecute her suit and prayed that her suit might be dismissed. Thereupon the present respondent, Musammat Nirma, the mother of her husband, who would have been entitled to the estate for her life if Musammat Parbati were then dead, made an application that she might be brought upon the record and allowed to defend the appeal. The court below allowed this application. Hence the present appeal.

The appellants contend that Musammat Parbati did not lose her estate upon becoming a convert to the Muhammadan religion, but that her right to her husband's property was protected by Act XXI of 1850 and that being a Muhammadan she was entitled to contract a legal marriage with her present husband. On the other hand, the respondent contends that under section 2 of Act XV of [469] 1856, the remarriage of Musammat Parbati worked a forefeiture of her interest in her first husband's estate, and that, therefore, there was a devolution of interest to the present respondent. It was further contended that even if this be not so, Musammat Parbati, though she represented her husband's estate so long as she remained a Hindu widow, ceased to do so when she changed her religion and married again, and that therefore the present respondent, as next reversioner, ought to be allowed to continue the proceedings and protect the estate.

In our opinion, her conversion to the Muhammadan religion did not divest Musammat Parbati of her interest in her first husband's estate in view of the provisions of Act XXI of 1850. This has been repeatedly held in this Court and by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The last case to which we may refer is the case of Khunni Lal v. Govind Krishna Narain (1). We are also clearly of opinion that section 2 of Act XV of 1856 does not divest her of her interest in her first husband's estate.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 466=11 A. L. J. 678=21 I. C. 335.

Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 cannot possibly include all widows. It is necessarily confined to "Hindu widows." Musammat Parbati was not a Hindu when she married her present husband. This Court has consistently held that the provisions of this Act do not apply to cases where the second marriage is valid irrespective of the provisions of the Act. Therefore, on the main ground of appeal, we think that the contention of the appellant is correct. Our attention has been called to the ruling of the Calcutta High Court, in the case of Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1). This ruling is inconsistent with the rulings of our own Court.

With regard to the second contention, namely, that Musammat Parbati, in the events which have happened, ceased to represent her late husband's estate, we need only point out that the sole ground upon which the respondent could be substituted for Musammat Parbati would be that there had been a devolution of the estate, which, for the reasons already stated, is clearly not the case. No doubt, if anything detrimental to the estate is done by Musammat Parbati or by any other person, the reversioners may have a right to take steps for the protection of the estate by [470] instituting a suit of their own. This is a very different thing to being substituted for Musammat Parbati in a suit which she instituted of her own motion and which she does not choose to prosecute.

We allow the appeal, set aside the order of the court below and dismiss the application with costs.

Act No. VII of 1889 (Succession Certificate Act)—Certificate of succession—Joint certificate not illegal if granted with the consent of the grantees.

Held that the grant of a joint certificate under the provisions of the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, is not illegal, provided that the persons to whom such certificate is granted all consent to its being granted in this form.

THE facts of the case were these:

Brij Nath, one of the heirs of a deceased Hindu, applied for a succession certificate. Two other heirs, Ram Raj and Ranchhor, preferred separate objections and claimed the certificate for themselves. Subsequently all three agreed to the grant of a certificate to them jointly. Another claimant to the certificate was Musammat Tirbeni about whom the District Judge remarked as follows:—" The position of Musammat Tirbeni in the family is only that of a person with a right to maintenance. She alleges that, as a special case, some of these debts belong to her. The ground on which the allegation is made is unusual. It seems not too probable that a woman would lend her stridhan to be invested and take no steps to see that it was invested in her own name. The burden of proving such a case is upon her, both as a matter of law and as a matter of common sense. Musammat Tirbeni adduced no evidence" The District Judge granted the certificate to the three jointly, on condition of their furnishing security for the indemnity of Musammat Tirbeni. One of the objectors appealed.

Babu Binoy Kumar Mukerji, for the appellant:—

A joint certificate granted to several persons is not contemplated by the Succession Certificate Act and is illegal; Lonachand Gangaram v. Uttamchand Gangaram (1) and Madan Mohan v. Ramdial (2) and the cases cited therein. If the granting [471] of a joint certificate is invalid, the consent of parties would not make it valid. Further, the District Judge was of opinion that prima facie there was no substance in Musammat Tirbeni's claim. She having failed to make out a prima facie claim, the Judge was not justified, without holding any further inquiry, in requiring security to be furnished by the grantees of the certificate. Before ordering security to be given, the Judge should have satisfied himself, by making a summary inquiry, that there was some foundation for her claim. I rely on the principle of the ruling in Balmakund v. Kundan Kunwar (3).

The respondents were not represented.

BANERJI and TUDBALL, JJ.:—We do not think that there is any merit in this appeal. The facts are these: An application was made by Brij Nath for a succession certificate to realize debts due to Ram Ratan, deceased. Ram Raj, Brij Nath and Ranchhor stated themselves to be the next reversioners to the estate of Ram Ratan, and they agreed that the certificate should be granted to all three of them. This has been done. But as Musammat Tirbeni claimed to be the owner of some of the debts, the learned Judge has ordered that three persons to whom the certificate was granted to furnish security. It is contended that the order granting a certificate to three persons is illegal. No doubt, it is inconvenient that a certificate should be granted to more than one person, but in the case before us the persons to whom the certificate was granted agreed to its being granted to all of them. One of these persons is the appellant himself. We do not think that the appellant can now contend that the court ought not to have granted the certificate. The precedents cited relate to cases in which there were rival claimants for the certificate, and the lower court granted a joint certificate to those claimants. This, of course, was held to be wrong. As for the order relating to the furnishing of security, we think under the circumstances it was a proper order. We dismiss the appeal but without costs, as the respondent is not represented.

Appeal dismissed.

evidence which the court ought to take into consideration and weigh when coming to a conclusion on the issue. But a mere vague statement that there had been sales to strangers without the production of the sale-deeds or certified copies thereof and without some further details of the sale is not sufficient to prove sales to strangers. Sewak Singh v. Girja Pande (1) discussed.

THIS was a suit for pre-emption based upon an alleged custom as to the existence of which the principal evidence was an entry in the village wajib-ul-arz. The defendants disputed the construction of the entry in the wajib-ul-arz relied upon by the plaintiffs, and they also pleaded that there had been several cases in the village of sales to strangers in respect of which no claim for pre-emption had been made, and put forward these instances as evidence that the custom alleged did not exist. The court of first instance, however, decreed the claim and this decree was confirmed on appeal. The defendants vendees appealed to the High Court.

Mr. A. P. Dube and Dr. S. M. Suleman, for the appellants.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J. and TUDBALL, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. Both the courts below decreed the claim. The defendant vendee appeals. He argues first that the extract from the wajib-ul-arz is ambiguous and not sufficient to prove the existence of the custom. He also argues that there was other evidence as to the non-existence of the custom which the court below has failed to appreciate; and lastly, it is argued that the court was not competent to set aside the lease mentioned in the plaint. We can see no ambiguity in the clause in the wajib-ul-arz. We, therefore, think that the courts below were right in holding that it was good prima facie evidence of the existence of a custom of pre-emption in this village, and that it was an incident of that custom that a relation ek-jaddi had preference over a co sharer who was not [473] ek-jaddi. The court below has found that the lease was not bona fide and was merely part of a scheme to avoid pre-emption. We are bound by this finding in second appeal, and therefore we cannot differ from the court below on this question. One of the witnesses for the defendant vendee deposed that there had been several sales to strangers. The court of first instance refers to the decision in Sewak Singh v. Girja Pande (1). STANLEY C. J., at page 9 of the report, says:—"The mere fact that evidence was given that sales and mortgages had taken place in the villages as to which no pre-emptive claim had been made does not negative the existence of the custom." With great respect, we think that this remark goes too far. In our opinion, where the court is trying the issue of the existence or non-existence of a custom every instance of a sale to a stranger is material evidence which the court ought to take into consideration and weigh when coming to a conclusion on the issue. In the present case having regard to the remarks of the court of first instance, which have been more or less accepted by the lower appellate court, we have gone into and considered the evidence that was given by the vendee on the subject of sales to strangers. The only evidence there was was that of a witness who was undoubtedly somewhat hostile to the plaintiff, in which he stated in vague terms that during his recollection these 5—7 sales were to strangers. In not a single one of these alleged cases was the sale-deed produced, nor were even the names of the majority of the vendees mentioned. Except for the vague statement that the sales were to strangers, the court was not informed who the vendees were. In our opinion, this was not the proper way to prove instances of sales to strangers. The sale-deeds should have been produced, or certified copies of them. It should be clearly and distinctly proved to the court who the vendees were and any other circumstances connected with the sales. Under these circumstances, we see no sufficient reason to set aside the decree of the court below. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), sections 11 et seqq—Occupancy holding Mahant—Mahant capable of acquiring occupancy rights for the benefit of the math which he represents.

Held that the mahant of a math, just as much as any other tenant who holds for his own personal benefit, can acquire occupancy rights under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, for the benefit of the math which he represents.

THIS was a suit for redemption of a mortgage made by a former mahant of a math. The plaintiff, as the present mahant, sued to redeem the property mortgaged, which belonged to the math and consisted of certain trees and rights of occupancy tenancy in certain plots of land. It was pleaded in defence that the plaintiff had no right to sue, as a math was not capable of acquiring or holding an occupancy tenancy. The court of first instance decreed the suit for the redemption of the mortgage of the occupancy tenancy and dismissed it as to the trees, and the lower appellate court confirmed the decree.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala (and Munshi Benode Behari), for the appellants :—

An idol could not acquire occupancy rights in a holding. The Act contemplated cultivation by the tenant himself. Under section 10 of the Agra Tenancy Act, in case of transfer of sir lands, they become subject of ex-proprietary tenancy. The idea was to provide means of subsistence for the tenant. A math could not acquire ex-proprietary rights. The Act did not contemplate the acquisition of such rights by the manager of a math. A "person" meant a living human being, and the section referred to a person who had "held" personally. This view was taken by the Board of Revenue in Select Decision No. 19 of 1912. Again the expression used in section 13 was 'he'. It could include 'she' but not an inanimate object. A tenant must be a person capable of occupying or cultivating the land.

Munshi Gobind Prasad, for the respondent, was not called upon.

[475] RICHARDS, C. J. and TUDBALL, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage. Two grounds of appeal are mentioned in the memorandum of appeal, namely, that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem the property and secondly that the suit was barred by limitation.

We are unable to accept the argument in favour of this last ground of appeal. With regard to the first point, it is urged that nobody except a human being is capable of acquiring or holding an "occupancy" tenancy and reliance is placed upon a ruling of the Board of Revenue, No. 19 of 1912, Babu Hira Das v. Pandit Sheo Dat Tiwari. It has to be admitted that property of all descriptions generally speaking, can be held by a math; but it is attempted to draw a distinction between an occupancy holding and other classes of property. In the present case the courts below have found that the property which it is sought to redeem formed portion of the math property and that it was held by the mortgagor as mahant. It was pleaded in the suit that the motgagor had been deposed from his office as mahant, and that he was succeeded by Sheo Pujan Gir, who was in turn succeeded by the present plaintiff. The mortgagor was made party to the suit, but he has not appeared to defend the case. It must be admitted that it is not necessary that the owner of an occupancy holding should do the actual cultivation with his own hands. He is quite entitled to, and in many cases must, employ others to do the cultivation. It is quite clear that there is no express prohibition against the acquisition of an occupancy holding by the manager of a math on behalf of the math. We do not think that it is possible to infer such a prohibition from any suggestion of alleged policy in the Tenancy Act.

We, therefore, think that the decision of the court below was correct and ought to be affirmed. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

THE question raised in this case was as to the proper court fee payable upon an appeal from a final decree under order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure. When the appeal was filed the stamp-officer of the Court reported as follows:—

"This is an appeal against an order passed under order XXXIV, rule 5, and it is appeable as an appeal from decree. This appeal is valued at Rs. 582-11-9 on which a court fee of Rs. 44-4-0 is payable. Rupees 2 having been paid, there is, therefore, a deficiency of Rs. 42-4-0 on this memorandum of appeal."

On admission of the appeal a further report was made:—

"For the reasons given in my report, dated the 14th of June, 1912, on the memorandum of appeal to this Court, the decree-holders respondents are liable to pay a court-fee of Rs. 105 on Rs. 1,503-6-0-1, the valuation of their appeal to the lower appellate court. A court-fee of annas 8 having been paid, there is, therefore, a deficiency of Rs. 104 8-0 due from them for the lower appellate court."

The question thus raised was remitted by the Taxing Judge, to the Bench hearing the appeal, by whom the following order was made.

KNOX and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ:—Another question arises in connection with the second appeal. The appeal before us is an appeal against an order under order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was valued at Rs. 582-11-9 and was put in on a paper bearing a court-fee stamp of Rs. 2. The office reported that the fee payable was Rs. 44-4-0 and that therefore [477] the appellant had to pay a deficiency of Rs. 42-4-0. The appellant raised no objection and made good the deficiency. The stamp-officer of the Court then pointed out that for similar reasons the decree-holders, the respondents in this appeal, were liable to pay a court fee of Rs. 105, instead of the court fee of eight annas which they paid on their appeal in the court of the District Judge. There was, therefore, a deficiency of Rs. 104-8-0 due from them. The respondents contested this report, and the Judge of this Court, to whom a reference was made, and who happens to be the Taxing Judge of the Court, held that the matter was one for the Bench hearing the appeal. The learned vakil for the respondents contended before us that the fee which he had paid in the court of the District Judge was all that was required by law and there was no deficiency due from him. The question raised is not free from difficulty, and it will affect a large number of cases. if this Court should hold that an appeal from an order absolute should bear the same fee as if it were an appeal from an original decree. The learned vakil asks us for time in which to prepare the case. We grant two weeks; but we think it would be well if we had another Judge to assist us in determining this question. We think that the learned Government Advocate should also appear in the interest of the revenue. We direct that these papers be laid before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice with a request that a third Judge should be added to the Bench for the determination of this question.

The case was then laid before KNOX, TUDBALL and RAFIQ, JJ.

Babu Sital Prasad Ghose, for the respondent:—

The court is bound to make a final decree under order XXXIV, rule 5, if the provisions of the preliminary decree passed under order XXXIV, rule 4, are not complied with. So that the only matter which the court, upon an application under order XXXIV, rule 5, is called upon to decide, is whether there has or has not been such compliance. This is no more than what an executing Court has to do, and it is submitted that the final decree is an order within the meaning of section 47 of the Code. It is not suggested that an application for a decree under order XXXIV, rule 5, must bear an ad valorem court fee, and there is no reason why, when such application is refused and an appeal is taken [478] from that refusal, the memorandum of appeal should be stamped with an ad valorem court fee. Anyhow the Court Fees Act makes no distinction between preliminary and final decrees, and the word 'decree used in that Act must bear the ordinary meaning given to that expression in the first part of the definition of the term in the Code of Civil Procedure It is clear, therefore, that the court fee paid by the present respondent in the court of the District Judge was all that required was by law and there was no deficiency due from him.

The Government Advocate (Mr. W. Wallach), was not called upon to reply.

KNOX, TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ :—We have heard all that the learned vakil for the respondent can urge in support of his contention that he was only bound in the lower appellate court to pay a court fee of annas eight as though he were appealing from an order, instead of an ad valorem duty. Looking to the change which has been made by the Legislature in order XXXIV. rules 4 and 5, as compared with sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, we have no doubt whatever that the court fee which he should have paid was an ad valorem court fee. The Legislature has deliberately altered the words "order absolute" and replaced them by the words "final decree." This is our answer to the question.

Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz—Partition of village into several mahals—Dastur dehi relating to whole village—Suit by co-sharer of one mahal against co-share of another mahal on ground of nearness in relationship to the vendor.

The dastur dehi of a village divided into several mahals, but which nevertheless was held to be applicable to the whole village, and to represent an arrangement come to by the co-sharers in the village amongst themselves, provided, as to pre-emption, as follows :—" If a co-sharer wants to sell his share, he must sell first to near co-sharers, then in the patti, then in the mahal, then in the village." Held that the effect of this clause was to give to a co-sharer in one mahal who was a relation of the vendor a preferential right of pre-emption over a co-sharer in another mahal who was not a relation, [479] THIS was a suit for pre-emption based upon the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz or dastur dehi of the village of Sarai Ghasi. The village at one time was divided into a 2½-biswa mahal held by the Skinner family and a 17½-biswa mahal held by other co-sharers. Subsequently the larger mahal was again sub-divided. The dastur dehi, however, was apparently applicable to the entire village, and represented an arrangement come to amongst the entire body of co-sharers. The provisions of the dastur dehi as to pre-emption were as follows :—" If a co-sharer wants to sell his share, he must sell first to near co-sharers, then in the patti, then in the mahal, then in the village." The property the subject of the present suit was situate in the Skinner mahal. The vendee was a co-sharer in another mahal of the village ; and the plaintiff pre-emptor was a co-sharer in a third mahal, but claimed precedence of the vendee owing to his being a relation of the vendor. The court of first instance dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 478=21 I. C. 628=11 A. L. J. 766.

RICHARDS, C. J. and TUDBALL, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The village in which the property is situate is called mauza Sarai Ghasi. At one time this village was divided into a 2½-biswa share, held by the Skinner family, and a 17½ biswa share held by other co-sharers. In course of time the 2½ biswas appear to have been formed into one mahal, and the 17½ biswas into another mahal. The 17½ biswas were afterwards divided into a number of different mahals. The property which is sought to be pre-empted is situate within the Skinner mahal. It appears that on the 13th of February, 1892, this very property was sold and purchased by one Bhola Mal. The present vendor, Ram Sahai, brought a suit for pre-emption, which was successful. He was a sharer in another mahal and he based his suit upon a record set forth in the dastur dehi of 1886. His claim was decreed, the court being of opinion that the record in the dastur dehi was one of an arrangement between the sharers in the entire village. There is this distinction between the present case and the one just mentioned, that in that case the claim was against a [480] stranger whilst, in the present case, the claim is by a sharer in a different mahal, who is a near relation of the vendor against a person who is a sharer in another mahal, but no relation. The court below has decided againt the plaintiff and dismissed the suit. It has referred to the case of Ganga Singh v. Chedi Lal (1). In that case this Court considered at some length what was the proper way to approach the consideration of a case of pre-emption where the issue was the existence or non-existence of a custom of pre-emption, and it pointed out that the weight which should be attached to extracts from the wajib-ul-arzes in different cases varied very much. The circumstances of the present case are very different. The extract from the dastur dehi of 1886, has been translated as follows :—

"If a co-sharer wants to sell his share, he shall first sell it to his near co-sharers, then to sharers in the patti, mahal, or the village; and if they refuse to take, then to any one he may like."

A more literal translation would be :—

"A co-sharer must sell first to near co-sharers, then in the patti, then in the mahal, then in the village."

This dastur dehi, notwithstanding that the village had been divided into a large number of mahals, was the dastur dehi for the entire village. Having regard to the division which had taken place, karibi cannot refer to anything exeept relationship, that is to say, a sharer who is related. Furthermore, the fact that defendant's vendor himself set up the right of pre-emption contained in this very document, is, we think, a very strong point both against himself and his vendee. The title of the defendant's vendor was this very decree in a suit for pre-emption. We are not in any way deciding that a custom of pre-emption exists. There are many reasons for thinking that the growth of such a custom in this village, owned as it was in part by members of the Skinner family was very improbable. But if the dastur dehi records an arrangement between the sharers in the village, it is an arrangement which is still in force. We think there was such an arrangement. There only remains the question whether or not, assuming that an arrangement between the owners of the village as to pre-emption [481] exists, it extends to giving a right of a sharer in one mahal, who is a relation, a preference over a sharer in another mahal who is no relation. We think that the clause, as a whole, can have no other meaning.

(1) (1911) I. L. R. 33 All. 605.

We, therefore, think the decree of the court below was erroneous and ought to be set aside. Before, however, finally deciding this appeal, it will be necessary to refer an issue to the court below, namely :—

What was the true sale consideration ?

We accordingly refer the above issue to the court below. The court below will receive such evidence relevant to this issue as the parties may adduce. On return of the finding, the usual ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

Issue remitted.

MAHADEO SINGH AND ANOTHER (Decree-Holders) v. SHEO KARAN SINGH AND ANOTHER (Judgment-Debtors).*

Hindu law—Daughter's estate—Decree for possession of father's estate obtained by daughter—Right of daughter's sons to execute such decree.

The daughter of a separated Hindu obtained a decree for possession of her father's estate against certain trespassers. Before, however, she could obtain possession, she died and her sons applied for execution. Held that the daughter represented her father's estate when she brought her suit for possession and that persons who succeeded to the estate were entitled to execute the decree which she had obtained.

[Ref: 38 All. 111=32 I. C. 104 ;]

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of a single Judge of the Court. The facts of the case are stated in the judgment under appeal which was as follows :—

"The two respondents Mahadeo Singh and Basdeo Singh, with their mother Lakhpati Kuar, instituted a suit for recovery of possession of certain immovable property against one Jagram Singh, on the allegation that the property in suit belonged to one Sarup Singh, who was the father of Lakhpati Kuar and grandfather of the respondents. Jagram Singh was a collateral of Sarup Singh. He resisted the suit on various grounds. The claim of the respondents was dismissed on the ground that it was premature and that it could not be brought in the life-time of their mother ; but a decree was passed in favour of Lakhpati Kuar in her own right as the daughter of Sarup Singh. She was decreed a daughter's estate. The first court passed the decree in her favour on the 26th of [482] November 1909, and it was upheld on appeal on the 13th of May, 1910. Both Musammat Lakhpati Kuar and Jagram died before the decree could be executed. The two respondents, the sons of Lakhpati Kuar, filed an application in the court of the Munsif of Azamgarh for execution of the decree in favour of their mother against the appellants, who are the legal representatives of Jagram Singh. The appellants opposed the application for execution, on the ground, among others, that the decree in favour of Lakhpati Kuar awarded her a life-estate only and could not be executed after her death. The learned Munsif gave effect to this plea and rejected the application. On appeal the learned District Judge reversed the decree of the first court on the ground that the respondents were the legal representatives of Musammat Lakhpati Kuar, the original decree-holder, and that for that reason the decree could be executed by them. The appellants have come up in second appeal to this Court and press the plea upon which the application was dismissed by the learned Munsif. I think that this appeal must prevail. The question at issue between the parties is not whether the respondents are or are not the legal representatives of Musammat Lakhpati Kuar, but whether the decree in favour of Lakhpati Kuar is capable of execution after her death. It is admitted that the decree was passed in her favour as the daughter of Sarup Singh, giving her a daughter's estate in respect of the property relating to which the decree was passed in her favour. After her death the decree became inoperative. It may be that the two respondents have a right to succeed to that property in preference to the collaterals of Sarup Singh. But that is a question which should be decided between the rival claimants by a regular suit. The mere fact of the two respondents being the daughter's sons of Sarup Singh does not give them the right to apply for execution of a decree, which became inoperative after the death of their mother. The appeal prevails. I set aside the order of the lower appellate court and restore that of the first court. Costs are allowed to the appellants."

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the appellants :—

Musammat Lakhpati, as owner and representative of the estate, brought the suit for recovery of the estate from a person who was a mere trespasser. It was not a mere personal action like a suit for damages; she represented and was acting for the benefit of the whole estate. After her death the appellants became the owners of the estate. Under such circumstances the decree obtained by her cannot cease to be operative after her death. The appellants are entitled to execute it. In her suit it was established that the property was the exclusive property of her father and that she was the heir. It follows as a legal consequence that after her death her sons are the owners. They need not bring a fresh suit to establish the same matter against the same defendant or [483] his representatives; they are entitled to the benefit of the decree obtained by the former holder of the estate as such.

Maulvi Muhammad Ishaq, for the respondents :—

Musammat Lakhpati's success in her suit did not necessarily carry with it the effect that after her her sons would be the owners. The sons might predecease her or be under some disqualification. It was not a judgment in rem but a personal decree. Under the Hindu Law the daughter's sons do not derive their title through the daughter, but through the maternal grandfather. The appellants, not being the heirs of Musammat Lakhpati but of Sarup Singh, are not benefited by the decree in her favour. On her death the question of the succession to Sarup Singh's estate opens up afresh. As sons of Musammat Lakhpati the appellants are not entitled to execute the decree.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen was not heard in reply.

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—In this case one Musammat Lakhpati brought a suit for possession against certain persons who, she alleged, had taken possession of her father's estate. She succeeded in establishing her case and getting a decree for possession. Before, however, the decree for possession could be executed she died, and thereupon her sons applied for execution, but their application was rejected by the court of first instance. On appeal, this decision was reversed and the application of the appellants was allowed. In second appeal, a learned Judge of this Court held that the decision of the court of first instance was correct and ought to be restored. Hence the present appeal.

In our opinion, the decree of the lower appellate court was correct. Musammat Lakhpati undoubtedly represented her father's estate when she brought the suit, and the persons who succeeded to the estate are entitled to execute the decree which she obtained. Otherwise the reversioners would be obliged to institute a fresh suit and to litigate again the same matters against the very same persons against whom Musammat Lakhpati had established her case. In principle the matter is governed by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council when they decided that, for general purposes, the widow represents the estate. We can, in the present case, make no distinction between a widow in possession [484] of her deceased husband's estate and a daughter in possession of her deceased father's estate. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court and restore the decree of the lower appellate court with costs in all courts.

Civil Procedure Code (1903), order XXXIV, rule 1—Mortgage—Suit for sale—Intentional non-joinder of subsequent mortgagee—Effect of such non-joinder.

Subsequently to the execution of a mortgage of a 4 biswa zamindari share in favour of A. S. the mortgagor executed a further (usufructuary) mortgage of a portion of the same share in favour of A. S, and his brother N. S. A. S. brought a suit for sale on the earlier mortgage, but without making N S. a party thereto. Held, that the effect of the non-joinder of N. S. would not be the total dismissal of the suit, but only of so much of it as related to that portion of the property which was covered by the subsequent mortgage.

[Diss: 24 I. C. 25=12 A. L. J. 619; Ref. 72 I. C. 453; 74 I. C. 943=21 A. L J. 701.]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

A simple mortgage, hypothecating a 4 biswa zamindari share, was executed on the 21st of April, 1892, in favour of Alam Singh. On the 28th of June, 1895, a usufructuary mortgage of 1½ biswas out of the 4 biswas was executed in favour of Alam Singh and his separated brother, Narain Singh. Alam Singh brought a suit on the prior mortgage. He did not mention the second mortgage and did not make Narain Singh a party to the suit. Objection on this score was taken at the earliest opportunity by the transferee of the equity of redemption. The existence of the second mortgage was proved, and the plaintiff was called upon to make Narain Singh a defendant. The plaintiff refused to do so on the ground that at that time the suit had become time-barred as against Narain Singh. The court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that Narain Singh was a necessary party and had not been impleaded. This decision was upheld by the lower appellate court. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the appellant :—

A subsequent mortgagee is, no doubt, a necessary party and order XXXIV, rule 1, requires him to be impleaded. But failure [485] to implead him does not necessarily entail the dismissal of the suit altogether. Order XXXIV, rule 1, is expressly made subject to the other provisions of the Code; it is therefore, governed by order 1, rule 9. The court should have determined the rights of the parties actually before it. Narain Singh would neither be bound nor affected by the decree; he could enforce his right of redemption in a subsequent suit. The case of Ram Charan Lal v. Muhammad Rahid-ud-din (1) is in my favour. In any event, the whole suit should not have been dismissed, but only to the extent of the property comprised in the second mortgage.

Babu Binoy Kumar Mukerji (with him Munshi Gobind Prasad), for the respondents :—

Previous to the enactment of the present Code of Civil Procedure it was well established that the deliberate non-joinder of a subsequent mortgagee was fatal to the suit. The question is how far the provisions of order I, rule 9, are to govern order XXXIV, rule 1. On this point I rely on the observations at page 553 of the report of the case Hori Lal v. Munman Kunwar (2). The plaintiff was well aware of the existence of the second mortgage, as he himself was one of the mortgagees thereunder. This is a case of deliberate non-joinder of a necessary party. Moreover, when called upon to make Narain Singh a party, the plaintiff refused to do so. The provisions of order XXXIV, rule 1, would become quite nugatory if cases like the present could go on with impunity, and the result would be a perplexing multiplicity of suits. At all events, the suit should be dismissed at least to the extent of the property comprised in the second mortgage. This suit is now time barred as against Narain Singh; as against the property comprised in his mortgage, the suit must be dismissed.

Mr. E. A. Howard replied.

BANERJI and TUDBALL JJ.:—This was a suit for sale under a mortgage, dated the 21st of April, 1892, executed in favour of the plaintiff, Alam Singh, by one Chatar Singh. The first set of defendants are the legal representatives of the mortgagor, who is now dead. The other defendants are subsequent transferees of the mortgaged property. It appears that on the 28th of June, 1895, a usufructuary mortgage of 1 biswa, 10 biswansis, out of the mortgaged [486] property, the extent of which is 4 biswas, was made in favour of the plaintiff, Alam Singh, and Narain Singh, his brother. Narain Singh was not made a party to the suit. On the ground that Narain Singh was a necessary party to the suit under order XXXIV, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure and had not been made a party, the court of first instance dismissed the suit. The decree of that court has been affirmed by the lower appellate court. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal, and it is contended on his behalf that the claim ought not to have been totally dismissed.

There can be no doubt that Narain Singh, as subsequent mortgagee of a portion of the mortgaged property, had an interest in the equity of redemption and was, therefore, a necessary party within the meaning of order XXXIV, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The effect, however, of the omission of Narain Singh from the suit was, in our opinion, not the total dismissal of the suit, but only of so much of it as related to the 1 biswa, 10 biswansis, of which Narain Singh is a subsequent mortgagee. There still remains the remaining 2 biswas, 10 biswansis and as to this, the omission of Narain Singh did not affect the claim. The plaintiff, if he is entitled to a decree, is entitled to realize the amount of his mortgage from the remainder of the mortgaged property. The courts below ought, therefore, to have tried the case as between the persons who were parties to the suit in respect of the portion of the mortgaged property which was unaffected by the subsequent mortgage in favour of Narain Singh and the plaintiff.

(1) (1912) 10 A. L. J. 134.

(2) (1912) I. L. R. 34 All. 549.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the courts below and remand the case to the court of first instance with directions to readmit it under its original number in the register and to try it on the merits. If the court finds that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree, the decree should be confined to the 2½ biswas which are not comprised in the mortgage of the 28th of June, 1895. Costs here and hitherto will abide the event.

Appeal decreed and cause remanded.

PARTAB SINGH AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. BHABUTI SINGH (Defendant),*

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, at Lucknow.]

[20th June and 23rd July, 1913.]

Minor—Representation of minor in suit—Suit to set aside compromise of and decrees in suits to which minors were parties—Civil Procedure Code (1882), sections 443, 456, 462—Minors unrepresented owing to fraud and misrepresentation of de facto guardian whose interest conflicted with theirs—Form of decree—Civil Procedure Code (1908), section 93—Act No. I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act), section 42—Question of law.

In this case the appellants sued for a declaration that a compromise of certain pre-emption suits and decrees based thereon, made on their behalf in 1899 when they were minors, were not binding on them having been obtained by the fraud and misrepresentation of the respondent (who was then their de facto guardian and manager of their property) and in proceedings in which they were practically unrepresented; and they prayed that they might be restored to the position held by them prior to the date on which the compromise and decrees were made. It appeared that, although the appellants were described in the proceedings as "under the guardianship" of one H. P., he had never been properly appointed their guardian ad litem by the Court as required by section 443 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882; that no bona fide application had ever been made under section 456 to have a guardian ad litem appointed by the Court; and that the leave of the Court had not been obtained to enter into the compromise on the appellant's behalf as was necessary under section 462.

Held that the appellants were entitled to the declaration they sought. H. P. had, their Lordships found, been introduced into the suits of 1899 by the respondent as the guardian or next friend of the appellants to advance the interests of the respondent and to defeat the interests of the appellants, which conflicted with those of the respondent: he had throughout acted under the directions and on behalf of the respondent and in his interest and contrary to the interests of the appellants, and the respondent had taken advantage of his position to the detriment of the appellants. There was therefore no one to protect them, and they were unrepresented in the proceedings, which were therefore not binding on them. Manohar Lal v. Jadunath Singh (1) followed.

Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) which had been applied to the case by the majority of the Court of the Judicial Commissioners was held not to be applicable.

Semble the question whether on certain stated facts the relief which the appellants prayed for should be granted or refused, was a question of law within the meaning of section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908); and where, on a difference of opinion on that question between two Judges of the [488] Court, the case was referred under that section to a third Judge, that was the only question he had jurisdiction to consider and decide.

APPEAL from a judgment and decree (14th March, 1910) of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed the judgment and decree (29th July, 1908) of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur, and dismissed the suit of the appellants.

The suit was brought on the 22nd of February, 1908, for a declaration that an agreement of compromise, dated the 15th of December, 1899 entered into on the plaintiffs' behalf during their minority, and two decrees based thereon were not binding on them; the plaint alleging in effect that the compromise, and consequent withdrawal of two suits for pre-emption (the subjects of the compromise) were fraudulent, inasmuch as one Hari Prasad, who acted in the said suits on behalf of the plaintiffs and was a subordinate and under the orders of their then guardian de facto the defendant Bhabuti Singh (now the sole respondent), had never been properly appointed by the Court as their guardian ad litem, and the Court's sanction to the compromise had been obtained by misrepresentation. The relief claimed was that the plaintiffs might be restored to the position held by them prior to the 15th of December, 1899, the date on which the two decrees were passed.

Bhabuti Singh was the only defendant who appeared, and, so far as is now material, his defence was that the plaintiffs were independently represented by Hari Prasad who had acted in their best interests by withdrawing their suit and entering into the compromise; and that the withdrawal, having received the sanction of the Court, could not be disturbed.

The circumstances prior to the suit and leading up to the compromise will be found fully stated in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit with costs making the declaration as sought by the plaintiffs.

From that decree the defendant preferred an appeal, which was heard by the Judicial Commissioner (Mr. E. CHAMIER) and the First Additional Judicial Commissioner (Mr. L. G. EVANS), who differed in opinion, the former holding that the appeal ought to be dismissed, and the latter being of opinion that it should be allowed and the relief claimed refused to the plaintiffs. Mr. CHAMIER said:

[489] "I hold that the plaintiffs were not effectively represented in the suits of 1899. Their de facto guardian was their opponent, who used his position to bring about a compromise much to his own advantage and to the detriment of the minors. I think there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs are not bound by such proceedings."

And to a contention that the Court had a discretion to give or refuse relief under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), and that relief should in their case be refused on various grounds he said:

"I think there can be little doubt that the plaintiffs had not funds in hand wherewith to purchase the property. If the cases had been fought out, the minors would have got a decree for pre-emption. Bhabuti Singh also would, according to the practice of the court, have been given a decree for pre-emption in case the minors did not pay the purchase money within the time limited by their decree. Bhabuti Singh would have been under no obligation to raise money on his personal security for the minors in order to enable them to take advantage of the decree and he would have been unable to mortgage their property for the purpose even if he had been so minded. It is clear therefore that Bhabuti Singh would have done nothing to prevent the dismissal of the minors' suit. Had Bhabuti Singh adopted this course such a suit as the one before us could never have been brought. . . . . I think it is a question whether such a suit as this is brought under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and whether we can in the exercise of our discretion refuse relief to the plaintiffs ; but assuming that the suit is brought under that section I am of opinion that we ought to give the plaintiffs relief. . . . . As for the argument that as Bhabuti Singh was under no obligation to claim pre-emption on behalf of the minors he was at liberty to direct Hari Prasad to withdraw their suit and their defence, I need only say that it is quite clear that a guardian is not entitled to use his ward's rights as a means of procuring an advantage for himself. A suit for pre-emption was filed on behalf of the minors. It was not disposed of according to law, but was suppressed for the benefit of the minors' guardian. In my opinion the Court was right in decreeing the plaintiffs' claim."

Mr. EVANS agreed generally with the facts found by the Judicial Commissioner, but said,

"In the present case the most that can be found against the defendant is that he used the rights of the minors to obtain some personal advantage. He did not allow any fraudulent decree to be passed against them, nor did he allow them to be unjustly deprived of any property. It appears to me that it would be an improper exercise of the discretion of this Court to allow the plaintiffs to reopen this litigation, which terminated in 1899, merely because their de facto guardian did not see fit to prosecute a claim for pre-emption on their behalf, especially when it is not proved that there were any funds in his possession belonging to the minors for investment in immovable property. . . . . I hold that this is pre-eminently a case in which the Court should not [490] exercise the discretion vested in it by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and should refuse to grant the relief prayed for. I would allow the appeal, and dismiss the claim."

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner on the same day made the following order under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908).

"We are both agreed that the sanction of a court does not validate a compromise which is invalid on other grounds.

"We are also agreed that Bhabuti Singh was the de facto manager of the minors' property, that he was not obliged to institute a suit for pre-emption on their behalf, that he caused the suit for pre-emption to be instituted on their behalf in order to protect himself against other claimants, that Hari Prasad in withdrawing the minors' suit and joining in the compromise acted under Bhabuti Singh's instructions, that if the cases had been fought out lots would have been drawn as regards the share in Khushalpur, the minors would have obtained a decree for pre-emption of the share in Ismailganj and Bhabuti Singh would have been given a decree for pre-emption in case the minors did not pay the purchase money within the time limited by their decree, that Bhabuti Singh had funds wherewith to take advantage of the decree, that the minors had no funds and Bhabuti Singh was under no obligation to raise funds for them.

"On these facts one of us is of opinion that the plaintiffs should be given a declaration that the compromise and decrees are not binding on them and that they are remitted to their original rights; the other is of opinion that the suit should be dismissed. The point on which we differ is certainly not a question of fact. After hearing counsel for the parties we hold that it is a point of law within the meaning of section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure and we accordingly direct that the appeal be laid before the Second Additional Judicial Commissioner under that section."

The matter was therefore re-argued before the Second Additional Judicial Commissioner (Mr. T. C. PIGGOTT), who agreed substantially with the First Additional Judicial Commissioner, being of opinion that the only facts with which the Court trying the case was not acquainted at the time when it accepted the compromise of the 15th of December, 1899, were that the suit for pre-emption in which the minors were plaintiffs (177 of 1899) had never been seriously intended to succeed, and that a decree for pre-emption in favour of the plaintiffs in that suit would, so far as can now be ascertained, have resulted in no benefit to the latter. In my opinion the case for the plaintiffs breaks down because these were not material facts from the point of view of the decision of the suits of 1899, and because their concealment on the part of Bhabuti Singh, if it was fraudulent at all, was not a fraud on the [491] minor plaintiffs but on certain other possible pre-emptors who might have been thereby discouraged from asserting their right.

The appeal from the Subordinate Judge was therefore allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

On this appeal—

Arthur Grey and R. Jacob for the appellants contended that they were not effectively represented in either of the suits for pre-emption in 1899, and that the respondent used his position as their guardian to bring about a compromise much to his own advantage, and to the detriment of the appellants. That was the finding of the Judicial Commissioner, and it was submitted that it was correct, and that he was right in holding that the appellants were not bound by such proceedings. Though they were described as under the guardianship of Hari Prasad, he was never appointed their guardian ad litem by any order of the Court as required by section 443 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882; and admittedly no bona fide application was ever made for that purpose under section 456. The compromise was signed by Hari Prasad as guardian of the appellants, but no sanction of the Court to it was ever asked for or obtained as required by section 462 of the Code. Reference was made to Manohar Lal v. Jadunath Singh(1), in which under similar circumstances it was declared that a compromise was not binding, and the minors were remitted to their original rights. In the appellate Court the effect of the findings and judgments of the Judicial Commissioner and the First Additional Judicial Commissioner was that under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908 (corresponding with section 575 of the Code of 1882) the appeal stood dismissed, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge confirmed. The exercise of the discretion of the Court to grant or refuse relief to the plaintiffs under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) was not a point of law within the meaning of section 98 of the Code, and a difference of opinion between the Judges on that point did not justify the reference of the case to a third Judge, even if the Court, after having delivered judgment had power to refer the case at all to another Judge, which it was submitted it had not: Lal Singh v. Ghansham Singh (2) was referred to. The Second Judicial [492] Commissioner exceeded his powers in coming to any finding apart from the specific point of law (assuming it was such) referred to him, and his judgment was, so far, irrelevant. Upon the facts found by the Bench of two Judges who first heard the appeal, the appellate Court had no discretion to refuse the relief claimed by the appellants. Their omission to ask in terms that the decree in their pre-emption suit should be set aside did not disentitle them to relief in the form of the declaration they sought. Reference was made to Isri Dut Koer v. Hans- butti Koerain (1). Even if such a discretion existed, it had been exercised by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the appellants and no sufficient reasons had been given for interfering with his exercise of discretion as the decree appealed from had done.

[De Gruyther, K. C., said he did not contend that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act had any application at all to the case.]

De Gruyther, K. C., and G. R. Lowndes, for the respondent contended that the dismissal of the pre-emption suit in which the appellants were plaintiffs was not procured by any fraud upon them by the respondent; that had been found by the judgment appealed from. Nor had the dismissal of that suit been shown to have been in any way prejudicial to the interests the appellants then had. If that suit had been contested to the end, the appellants would have been unable to take advantage of any decree that might have been passed in their favour. There was also in the evidence recorded in the present suit nothing to show that the said suit of 1899 was not instituted bona fide in the interests of the appellants. The present suit, it was submitted, having been filed for the purpose of obtaining a declaratory decree only, was bad in form, inasmuch as it did not pray that the decree in the suit of 1899 in which the appellants were plaintiffs should be set aside. But, assuming that it was rightly framed in asking only for a declaratory decree, the Court had a discretion as to granting or refusing such declaration, and that discretion had been properly exercised by the appellate Court, because the appellants were not under the circumstances of the case entitled to the relief they claimed. Reference was made to the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), sections 6 and 9, as to the nature and extent of rights of [493] pre-emption as having preference over other claims, though the period of time within which they must be brought was limited, namely, one year from the date of sale. The appeal should be dismissed.

Arthur Grey replied.

1913. July 23*rd*:—The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Sir JOHN EDGE:—

The suit in which this appeal from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh has arisen was brought by Kunwar Partab Singh and Kunwar Ahbaran Singh in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur against Bhabuti Singh and others on the 22nd of February, 1908. The plaintiffs, who are the appellants here, sought by their suit to have it declared that a decree which was made on the 15th of December, 1899, in a suit for pre-emption which had been brought by Bhabuti Singh, who is respondent here, on the 26th of June, 1899, against certain vendees and others, and in which the appellants, who were then minors, had been added as defendants, was not binding as against them. The plaintiffs appellants also sought in this suit to have a decree set aside which had been made on the 15th of December, 1899 in a suit for pre-emption which had been brought on the 27th of July, 1899, by them under the guardianship of one Hari Prasad against vendees and others and in which Bhabuti Singh had been added as a defendant, and they claimed to be restored to the position which they had held prior to the 15th of December, 1899, and such other relief as they were entitled to.

The material facts which their Lordships find are briefly as follows. The plaintiffs were the sons of Raja Balbhaddar Singh, who died on the 27th of December, 1897. The property of the joint family consisted of, amongst other things, shares in Mahal Ismailganj and Mahal Khushalpur, in respect of which Raja Balbhaddar Singh was at his death recorded in the Revenue Papers as the proprietor. After the death of Raja Balbhaddar Singh the defendant respondent, Bhabuti Singh assuming to act as the guardian of the plaintiffs and as the manager of their property, obtained in April, 1898, mutation of names in the Revenue Papers in their favour. Syed Muhammad Ismail Syed Idur Hasan and Syed Mohammad Sadiq on the 3rd of August, 1898, sold certain shares in mahal Ismailganj and Mahal Khushalpur [494] to Munshi Niaz Ahmad. Babu Ram and Bhagwan Das. It was in respect of that sale that the suits for pre-emption of the 26th of June, 1899, and the 27th of July, 1899, were brought. The vendors and the vendees were original defendants to these suits. Bhabuti Singh had a right of pre-emption equal but not superior to the right of pre-emption of Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh in respect of the shares which were sold in Mahal Khushalpur, and he had a right of pre-emption inferior to theirs in respect of the shares which were sold in Mahal Ismailganj. It is obvious that the interests of the minors Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh conflicted with the interests of Bhabuti Singh. On the 26th of June, 1899, Bhabuti Singh, on his own behalf, brought a suit to pre-empt the shares which had been sold in the two mahals, and made the vendors and vendees defendants to the suit. On the 5th of August, 1899, Bhabuti Singh caused Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, who were then minors, to be added as defendants to that suit. According to the amended plaint, Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, minors, under the guardianship of Hari Prasad, were added as defendants under an order, dated the 5th of August, 1899. The Court appears to have made an order on the 5th of August, 1899, that Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh should be added as defendants, but it does not appear that the Court had ordered that they should be added as defendants under the guardianship of Hari Prasad. The amendment of the plaint adding Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh as defendants was not attested by the signature of the Judge. No order appointing Hari Prasad as a guardian for the suit for Partab Singh or Ahbaran Singh was applied for or was made. By section 443 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, it was enacted that—

"Where the defendant to a suit is a minor, the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority, shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor, to put in the defence for such minor, and generally to act on his behalf in the conduct of the suit.".

By section 441 of the same Code it was enacted that—

"Every application to the Court on behalf of a minor (other than an application under section 449) shall be made by his next friend, or by his guardian for the suit."

The result is that the minors, Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh were not in law represented in the suit which was brought by Bhabuti Singh.

[495] On the 27th of July, 1899, Bhabuti Singh, who was then the de facto guardian of the minors Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, and the manager of their property, caused a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale of the 3rd of August, 1898, to be brought by Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh under the guardianship of Hari Prasad against the same vendors and vendees who were defendants to the suit of the 26th of June, 1899. The shares which it was sought to pre-empt by the suit of the 27th of July, 1899, were the same shares which it had been sought to pre-empt by the suit of 26th of June, 1899. On the 7th of August, 1899, Bhabuti Singh was added as a defendant to the suit of the 27th of July, 1899. On the 27th of July, 1899, Hari Prasad had in the suit in which Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh were the plaintiffs filed an application to be appointed their guardian ad litem. The application purported to be made under section 456 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. The Subordinate Judge to whom the application was made, by his order of the 27th of July, 1899, held that the application was unnecessary, and directed that the costs should be borne by the plaintiffs in that suit in any event.

Bhabuti Singh, the vendors, the vendees, and Hari Prasad, professing to act on behalf of Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, entered into an agreement of compromise, and on the 15th of December, 1899, filed in the suit in which Bhabuti Singh was the plaintiff a petition in which it was stated that it was agreed that Bhabuti Singh should pay Rs. 15,000 without costs to the vendees, and that a decree for possession of the property sold should be passed in favour of Bhabuti Singh by right of pre-emption. On that petition the then Subordinate Judge passed a decree in that suit in favour of Bhabuti Singh. As Hari Prasad had not been appointed guardian for the suit for the minors Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, they were in law unrepresented, and the decree did not bind them. Further, Hari Prasad had not obtained the leave of the Court to enter into that agreement of compromise on behalf of the minors Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh.

In pursuance of the agreement of compromise to which their Lordships have referred, Hari Prasad, professing to act as guardian of the minors Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, on the 15th of December, 1899, presented to the Court a petition in the suit in [496] which Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh were the plaintiffs, in which it was stated that it had been settled between the parties that the decree should be passed in favour of Bhabuti Singh in his suit ; that the compromise had been filed in Court ; and that Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh were willing to withdraw their claim; and it was prayed that the withdrawal of their claim should be sanctioned, and that their suit should be dismissed. That petition was signed by Hari Prasad, Bhabuti Singh, the vendors, and the vendees. Hari Prasad appeared in Court in support of that petition, and stated that —" Since Bhabuti Singh has acquired this hakkiat on the basis of pre-emption, therefore the minors have now no objection, and they do not advance a claim to the said hakkiat as against Bhabuti Singh." On that petition the then Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit of Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh. It does not appear that the Subordinate Judge was informed that the minors Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh were in law unrepresented in the suit of the 26th of June, 1899, in which Bhabuti Singh had obtained a decree as against them and others for the pre-emption of the shares which Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh were in their suit claiming to pre-empt nor does it appear that the Subordinate Judge was informed that the petition for the dismissal of the suit of Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh was made in pursuance of an agreement of compromise which Hari Prasad acting as next friend of the minors Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, had entered into without the leave of the Court. This Board has held in Manohar Lal v. Jadunath Singh (1), that in cases to which section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, applies there ought to be evidence that the attention of the Court was directly called to the fact that a minor was a party to the compromise, and it ought to be shown, by an order on petition, or in some way not open to doubt, that the leave of the Court was obtained, and that it is not sufficient proof that the exigencies of section 462 were complied with to show that the minor was described in the title of the suit as a minor, as in that case, suing "under the guardianship of his mother," and that the terms of the compromise were before the Court. The agreement of compromise in pursuance of which Hari Prasad obtained the [497] dismissal of the suit of Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh was void as against them and on that ground, if there were no other, they are entitled to have the decree dismissing the suit of the 27th of July, 1899, set aside.

Hari Prasad had been a karinda of Raja Balbhaddar Singh, and he acted in a subordinate capacity under Bhabuti Singh in the management of his property of Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh after Bhabuti Singh assumed the guardianship of the minors. Their Lordships agree with the learned Judicial Commissioner that in the proceedings to which they have referred "Hari Prasad was a mere dummy, that there was no one to protect the interests of the plaintiffs (Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh), and that in fact Bhabuti Singh took advantage of his position." Their Lordships find that Hari Prasad was introduced into the suits of 1899 by Bhabuti Singh as the guardian or next friend of the minors Partab Singh and Abharan Singh to advance the interests of Bhabuti Singh and to defeat the interests of Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, for whom previously and subsequently Bhabuti Singh was acting as guardian and as the manager of their property. Hari Prasad throughout acted under the directions and on behalf of Bhabuti Singh and in his interests, and contrary to the interests of Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh and to their detriment. Upon these findings of fact it follows as an obvious conclusion that the compromise and the proceedings which were taken in pursuance of it were not binding upon Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, and it is clear, apart from the other considerations which their Lordships have already discussed, that Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh are also on these findings of fact entitled to relief.

The Subordinate Judge of Sitapur in this suit gave Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh a decree on the 29th of July, 1908. From that decree Bhabuti Singh appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The appeal was heard by a Bench consisting of the Judicial Commissioner and the First Additional Judicial Commissioner. The learned Judicial Commissioner, on the facts found by him, held that Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh were entitled to the decree which they had obtained from the Subordinate Judge, and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. The First Additional Judicial Commissioner agreed with [498] the findings of the Judicial Commissioner on all the material facts. In his judgment the First Additional Judical Commissioner stated :—

"I agree with my learned colleague in holding that it is satisfactorily established that the appellant (Bhabuti Singh) was de facto manager of the minors' property at that time (1899) and that Hari Prasad in withdrawing the minors' suit acted under his instructions. If the case had been fought out the minors (Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh) would probably have obtained a decree for the larger portion of the property and lots might have been drawn with respect to a smaller portion thereof. In arranging for this compromise the appellant acted in his own interests, and the reason why he got a pre-emptive suit instituted on behalf of the minors was to protect himself in case other persons who had a better right of pre-emption than himself instituted suits claiming pre-emption of the property. After the period of limitation for such suits had expired he withdrew the minors' claim and obtained a decree in his own favour."

Notwithstanding that finding the First Additional Judicial Commissioner, for reasons which appear to their Lordships to be irrelevant, considered that, exercising a discretion under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, he ought to refuse to grant the relief for which Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh had prayed, and held that the appeal should be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, did not apply. The Judicial Commissioner and the First Additional Judicial Commissioner having differed in opinion on the point of law as to whether section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, applied to the case, directed that the appeal should be laid before the Second Additional Judicial Commissioner under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The Second Additional Judicial Commissioner did not apparently confine himself to a consideration of the point of law, with which alone he had under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, jurisdiction to deal; he apparently agreed with the opinion of the First Additional Judicial Commissioner that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, applied, and held that the appeal should be allowed and the suit should be dismissed with costs in both Courts. In accordance with the opinions of the First Additional Judicial Commissioner and the Second Additional Judicial Commissioner a decree was passed on the 14th of March, 1910, by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh allowing the appeal and dismissing the suit with costs. From that decree this appeal has been brought.

[499] Their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal should be allowed and the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner should be set aside, and that the appellants, Partab Singh and Ahbaran Singh, should have a decree setting aside the decree of the 15th of December, 1899, in their suit, and declaring that the agreement of compromise and the decree of the 15th of December 1899 in the suit of Bhabuti Singh are not binding upon them or either of them, and that they are entitled to such rights as they had before their suit was dismissed on the 15th of December, 1899. Their Lordships will advise His Majesty accordingly. Bhabuti Singh the respondent must pay the costs of this appeal and of his appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.

Appeal allowed.

The facts of this case are set forth in the judgment of the Court; but, briefly, this was a suit for damages on account of the breach by the defendant of a contract to purchase certain immovable property, entered into with the certificated guardian of certain minors with the sanction of the Court. The property was subsequently sold by auction at less than the convenanted price ; [500] hence this suit to recover the balance. The court of first instance decreed the claim, with the exception of an item of Rs. 250. On appeal by the defendant the plaintiffs' cross-objection as to this item was allowed and the claim decreed in full. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

RYVES and LYLE, JJ :—Musammat Said-un-nissa plaintiff No. 1 is the mother of the plaintiffs Nos. 2—6. Of these, Zia-ul-Islam was a major and the rest were minors. Some property belonging to them was under attachment and had been advertized for sale in execution of a decree obtained against Sultan-ul-Haq, the deceased husband of Musammat Said-un-nissa and the father of the remaining plaintiffs. The mother was anxious to sell the property by private contract and applied to the District Judge to be appointed a certificated guardian of her minor sons. This application was granted on the 29th of July, 1911. On the 2nd of September, 1911, Babu Ram applied to the court for leave to purchase the property for Rs. 5,000. The Judge passed an order that "the applicant, plaintiff No. 1 is allowed to sell the shops at least for Rs. 5,000 to Babu Ram or anyone else who may offer a higher price. The draft of the deed should be filed for the approval of the court." This order was passed on the 15th of September, 1911. Subsequently a draft deed was prepared and was filed by the plaintiffs in the District Judge's Court and the District Judge approved of that draft on the 31st of October. In that deed, the two major plaintiffs agreed to execute a sale-deed of their own shares, while Musammat Said-un-nissa entered into a similar contract as guardian of the minors for the sale of their shares in the property. This draft must be considered as an acceptance by the plaintiff of Babu Ram's offer to purchase the property for Rs. 5,000 and this acceptance, as found by the lower court, was duly communicated to Babu Ram. Subsequently, Babu Ram failed to carry out the contract and, in the result the property was sold by auction and realized less than Rs. 5,000. This suit was brought to recover the difference between what was realized and the sum of [501] Rs. 5,000 which Babu Ram contracted to pay for it, by way of damages for breach of contract. The first court decreed the suit with the exception of Rs. 250, which sum was claimed as costs involved in the auction-sale, on the ground that the alleged damage on this head was too remote. There was an appeal and a cross-objection before the learned District Judge. He dismissed the appeal, but allowed the cross-objection with reference to this sum of Rs. 250.

Before us it has been argued, first, that there was no complete contract between Babu Ram on the one hand and the plaintiff, Said-un-nissa, on the other. As we have already said, we have a finding of the learned District Judge on this point which is conclusive. It was then argued on the authority of Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed Chowdhuri (1) that the plaintiff could not make a valid contract for sale of this immovable property on behalf of the minors. In the case in I. L. R., 39 Calcutta, what was laid down was that the manager, with whom their Lordships were then concerned, could not bind the minor or the minor's estate by a contract for purchase of immovable property, and that, as the minor was not bound by the contract, there was no mutuality, and that the minor, who had attained majority at the date of suit, could not claim specific performance. It was not shown in that case that the manager was the certificated guardian of the minor, and, even if he was, that he had obtained sanction of the court under section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act to enter into a contract on behalf of the minor. A certificated guardian's powers are regulated and defined by Statute, namely, the Guardians and Wards Act. In the present case, the contract was entered into by a certificated guardian after receipt of the Court's sanction and the suit is for damages for breach of a contract so entered into. In our opinion the Privy Council ruling does not apply to the facts of the present case. We do not think the Privy Council ruling applies to guardians appointed by Statute, such as the Guardians and Wards Act or the various Court of Wards Acts. The third objection taken is that the lower court should not have allowed the item of Rs. 250. In our opinion, for the reasons given by the lower court, its decree was justified. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The brother and widow of a deceased Hindu settled a dispute between them as to the ownership of the property of the deceased by means of a joint application in the Revenue Court asking that the property should be recorded half in the name of each. This was done, and subsequently each sold the share of which he or she was recorded as owner. Thereafter the widow sued to recover the share which had gone to her husband's brother. Held, that it must be presumed from the application in the mutation proceedings, the recording of names by the Revenue Court in accordance with that application and the subsequent sales on the strengh of that record, that the parties entered into a family arrangement, and the application presented to the Revenue Court was therefore, not compulsorily registrable and was admissible in evidence.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 502=11 A. L. J. 765 =21 I. C. 29.

THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of a single Judge of the Court. The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment under appeal, which was as follows:—

"One Mohan Singh died in 1903 leaving a brother Ram Prasad Singh and a widow Musammat Kokla. A dispute arose between these two on the death of Mohan Singh as to the property of the latter. Ram Prasad, alleging that the property was the joint family property and that Kokla Kunwar was unchaste, claimed the entire property. Kokla Kunwar, on the other hand, alleged that as the widow of Mohan Singh, who had acquired the property for himself, she was entitled to succeed. They put in an application in the Revenue Court before whom proceedings in mutation were being held. In this application they stated that the family being a joint one they had agreed that each be recorded in respect of one-half of Mohan Singh's property. After the mutation proceedings Ram Prasad Singh sold his one-half of the property and Kokla Kunwar also sold hers. Kokla Kunwar instituted this suit in May, 1911, claiming possession of the one-half of the property, which had been sold by Ram Prasad Sing to Piari Lal, defendant No. 2, who is the appellant in this Court. The suit was defended in the court of first instance by Piari Lal alone. The plaintiff alleged that the property was the self-acquired property of her husband to which she was entitled on his death; that she had been induced by fraud and misrepresentation to agree to her brother-in-law being recorded in respect of one-half of the property, and that she had no one to advise her at the time as to the propriety of this agreement. The court of first instance, while holding that there was no fraud or misrepresentation proved to have been practised on her, found that the property was the joint property of the family and that the plaintiff had become unchaste. On these findings the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff appealed. The lower appellate court was not satisfied that the [503] unchastity imputed to the plaintiff had been established and held that the property had been the self-acquired property of Mohan Singh, inasmuch as he had obtained it personally as a grant from the Government. On the question of fraud the court below states:—'The plaintiff alleges that she acceded to the compromise on account of misrepresentations that were made to her. No misrepresentation was proved, and if it was necessary for her to establish this contention her suit and the present appeal must certainly fail.' In the latter part of the judgment the learned Judge further observes:—In the case now under consideration there is nothing to show what the circumstances were in which the compromise was arrived at.' The learned Judge was further of opinion that 'the compromise amounted to a transfer of a right to immovable property such as could only be effected by means of a registered instrument.' The compromise in the present case was simply an application put in the Revenue Court. It was not registered. On these findings the lower appellate court decreed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff's suit had included a claim for mesne profits, the amount of which was not ascertained in the court of first instance, and the lower appellate court, without noticing this omission, gave the plaintiff a decree for the full amount claimed. In appeal to this Court this last point is also one of the grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that this petition to the Revenue Court should be looked upon in the nature of a family settlement on which the court should act, and I am referred to a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (1) and to another case, Madan Lal v. Chhuttan Singh (2). With reference to the view of the court below that the document was one requiring registration it is pointed out that the petition to the Revenue Court is not relied on as a deed of transfer of immovable property, but simply as evidence of the agreement between the parties as to how the entry in the Government papers should be made of their respective rights thereto. A further ground taken is that the suit is barred by limitation inasmuch as the plaintiff comes in eight years after the settlement of 1903. Finally it is contended that the conduct of the plaintiff is such as to operate as estoppel in favour of defendant No. 1. The ruling referred to in the judgment of the lower appellate court, Rustam Ali Khan v. Gaura (3), does not, in my opinion, bear on the present case. In that case there was a dispute between the plaintiff and her two sisters in the matter of mutation of names in the Revenue Court. A compromise was entered into and the compromise dealt with other properties, over and above the landed property in respect of which the Revenue Court was concerned with in the mutation proceedings, and it was held that in respect of this latter property the compromise could have no effect, inasmuch as the document of compromise had not been registered It was observed in the course of the judgment that, as bearing on the issues raised in the case, the proceedings before the Revenue Courts, including the petition of compromise and the orders passed by the court, were undoubtedly admissible in evidence and must be taken into account for what they may be worth. In my opinion the contention advanced on behalf of the appellant in respect of the compromise is correct and [504] must be sustained. By the petition to the Revenue Court neither of the parties thereto purported to convey any property. The petition simply contained a statement by the parties that they agreed that each should be recorded in respect of one-half of the property in dispute. Such documents are put in every day in the Revenue Courts and so far as my experience goes registration of such instruments is not insisted on. If then registration of this document is not necessary, it can be looked to as evidence of the agreement between the parties so far back as 1903. The plaintiff alleged that the compromise, as it is called, had been obtained from her by means of fraud, misrepresentation, &c. As I understand the judgments of the courts below the plaintiff made no attempt to lay even the foundation of a case of fraud or misrepresentation, and there is undoubtedly a clear finding by the lower appellate court that no fraud or misrepresentation was proved. The settlement of the dispute between the parties embodied in the application to the Revenue Court was a good agreement and is good evidence of what the parties considered should be done in the dispute they were engaged in. This being the case and nothing having happened subsequent to this agreement which would give the plaintiff any right to resile from it, I must hold that the plaintiff's suit is not maintainable. I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all courts."

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J.--The facts out of which this appeal arises are fully set forth in the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court which is reported in 11 A. L. J. R. 157. To put them very shortly, the dispute is about a moiety of the property which at one time belonged to Mohan Singh. Mohan Singh died in 1903, leaving a brother, Ram Prasad Singh, and a widow, Musammat Kokla, the plaintiff in the present suit. They were disputing about the estate of Mohan Singh. Ram Prasad Singh alleged that he was joint with Mohan Singh, whilst Musammat Kokla said that Mohan Singh was separate. The dispute ended by the parties agreeing that half the property should be recorded as belonging to Musammat Kokla, whilst the other half should be recorded as belonging to Ram Prasad Singh. Later on, Ram Prasad sold the half share that stood in his name, whilst Musammat Kokla sold the half that stood in her name. She then brought the present suit to recover the half that had stood in Ram Prasad's name and had been sold by him. The lower appellate court has found that Mohan Singh and Ram Prasad [505] Singh were separate, but it has also found that it was not established that any fraud or misrepresentation had been practised on Musammat Kokla and accordingly decreed her suit.

The learned Judge of this Court held that under the circumstances the petition filed in mutation proceedings must be regarded as a family settlement and it did not require registration, and on these grounds dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

In our opinion, it must be presumed from the whole proceedings commencing with the petition for mutation, the order of the revenue authorities recording the names in accordance with the petition, and the subsequent sales upon the strength of this record, that the parties entered into a family arrangement. On these grounds we think the decree of the learned Judge of this Court ought to stand. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Tenant in possession without a patta*—Suit to enforce hypothecation of property as security for rent.*

Held that a hypothecation of other property by certain tenants as security for their rent was none the less enforceable because, though the tenants had executed a kabuliat in respect of the land held by them, no patta had been executed by the landlords in their favour. Sheo Karan Singh v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh (1) referred to.

THIS was a suit to enforce a hypothecation of certain property executed by tenants as security for their rent. The tenants were in possession of the land leased to them, in respect of which rent was due, and had executed a kabuliat therefor; but no patta had been executed in their favour by the landlords, and upon this ground it was contended that no rent was legally exigible and the security was not enforceable. The court of first instance decreed the claim; but the lower appellate court gave effect to the defendants' contention and reversed this decree. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, for the respondents.

RICHARDS, C. J. AND BANERJI, J.—The decision of the court below in this case cannot be supported. Ismail Khan and Zarina Khatun were admittedly in possession of the property leased to them by the plaintiffs. To secure the rent which they agreed to pay for such use and occupation, they hypothecated their property. The present suit was one to enforce the hypothecation. The suit was clearly maintainable, and the court below was wrong in holding that because no patta was granted to the executants of the kabuliat, the rent agreed to be paid was not payable and the security for its payment could not be enforced. This case is similar in some respects to that of Sheo Karan Singh v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh (1). We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the court below and remand the case to that court under order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure with directions to re-admit it under its original number in the register and to dispose of the other questions which arise in the case. The appellant must have the costs of this appeal. Other costs will follow the event.

[507] THIS was an appeal by the Local Government from an order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge of Banda in the case of one Ram Newaz charged under sections 304 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code, with being concerned, along with his two brothers Ram Bharose and Ram Bisal, with causing the death of one Ram Saran. The facts of the case are set forth at length in the judgment of the Court.

The officiating Government Advocate (Mr. W. Wallach), for the Crown.

Mr. D. R. Sawhny, for the accused.

TUDBALL and RYVES, JJ.—This is an appeal by the Local Government from a decision by the Sessions Judge of Banda, whereby he acquitted one Ram Nawaz of the offences of murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder under sections 302 and 304 of the Indian Penal Code. The accused was committed for trial together with his two brothers, Ram Bharose and Ram Bisal, on a charge under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge added a charge under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. He convicted Ram Bharose and Ram Bisal of the lesser offence under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code and acquitted them of murder. He sentenced them to ten years' rigorous imprisonment each.

In regard to Ram Newaz, though he found that he was present and took part in the assault on the deceased, he passed an order of acquittal. Ram Bhraose alone appealed against his conviction.

A Bench of this Court (of which one of us was a member), on the record coming before it, issued notice to both Ram Bharose and Ram Bisal to show cause why they should not be convicted of murder and the sentences enhanced. In the result, the appeal of Ram Bharose was dismissed, the two men were convicted of murder and were sentenced to death. The case of Ram Newaz was not then before the Court and his guilt or innocence was not considered. The Local Government has now appealed against his acquittal, and we have to decide whether or not his alleged participation in the assault has been proved and, if so, of what offence he is guilty.

The case for the prosecution is a simple one. The evidence of Ram Dat and Sub-Inspector Wali Muhammad Khan shows [508] that Ram Bharose trespassed in the house of one Jasodia for the purpose of committing adultery with her daughter. On an alarm being raised, some neighbours arrived upon the scene, seized Ram Bharose and beat him. The deceased Ram Saran was one of them. Ram Bharose was prosecuted and convicted and sentenced in December, 1912, to four weeks' rigorous imprisonment, from which he was released some time in January last.

The case for the prosecution is that on the 24th of January, 1913, shortly before sunset, the three brothers Ram Bharose, Ram Bisal and Ram Newaz met the deceased Ram Saran near a tank outside the village in which they all reside. The deceased was returning home from a neighbouring village. The three brothers were armed with lathis. They at once attacked Ram Saran, felled him to the ground and continued all three to beat him with their clubs as he lay. The witnesses, Gajadhar Bharbunja, Sheonath Arack and Sheonarain Brahmin, who were not far away, were attracted to the spot, and on their remonstrance the accused ran away. The relations of the deceased were summoned, and they removed the body. Ram Kishore, the brother of the deceased, proceeded to the police station, some eight miles distant, where at 8 P. M. a report was made as against all three of the accused. The presence of the witnesses, Sheonath and Gajadhar, at the scene, was also mentioned. Ram Saran died that same night as a result of the injuries inflicted by the three accused.

The medical evidence shows that the deceased was mercilessly and brutally beaten with clubs. On the crown of the head, there were two contused wounds and innumerable abrasions. One blow had been inflicted behind the right ear. On each arm there were two contused wounds and there was an injury to the left hand. There were marks of injuries on both knees and the mark of a blow on the waist. There was compound fracture of both bones of the left lower leg. The skull was found to have been fractured into four pieces. It is, therefore, evident that the deceased, as the medical witness states, had been cruelly beaten with lathis.

As to the actual facts of the assault, they are proved by the evidence of the witnesses, Gajadhar and Sheonath and Sheonarain. These are persons of different castes, and there is not a word in the evidence to show that they are otherwise than impartial [509] witnesses who have testified to the facts to the best of the ability of ignorant villagers. There are no doubt some trivial minor discrepancies, but none of such importance as to throw any doubt on their honesty or good faith. The evidence of Gajadhar shows that, while grazing his cattle that evening on the embankment of the tank, he noticed Ram Saran walking along at the foot of the embankment. He also saw the three brothers walking along the top of it. The next thing he noticed was that the three accused were beating Ram Saran at the foot of the embankment. He shouted to Sheonath, who was on the other side of the embankment, and the latter and also the witness Sheonarain ran up to see what was happening. Sheonath states that when he caught sight of the scene, the deceased was on the ground and the three accused were all striking him with their lathis. On the witnesses remonstrating, the accused persons ran away. Sheonarain corroborates. The witnesses admit that Ram Saran had a lathi and this is obvious by reason of the fact that one accused, Ram Bisal, bore the marks of two blows on his person when at 8 p.m. he arrived at the police station and made a report. Of course it is possible that he might have caused these two injuries to be inflicted on his person by his brothers, but it is far more probable that Ram Saran, when attacked, used his weapon in self-defence. Ram Bisal reportad that he had found Ram Saran allowing his cattle to graze on the crops in his field (which is some 200 yards or more from the tank) and when he atttempted to remove them Ram Saran called to his three brothers, who arrived and drove off the cattle, while Ram Saran himself struck Ram Bisal twice with his lathi. This was the case put forward by Ram Bisal in his defence, and in the judgment on his appeal the reasons for holding it to be false are set forth. The police officer who made the inquiry found blood stains at the foot of the embankment, which clearly indicate the spot where Ram Saran was beaten. This story, moreover, is clearly untrue and does not account in any way for the numerous and severe injuries found on the body of the deceased. We are here, however, concerned with the case of Ram Newaz. There can be no doubt of the truth of the prosecution story. The Judge and the assessors were unanimous in accepting it.

[510] The defence of Ram Newaz was an alibi. The assessors stated that they accepted it. The Judge refused to do so, and held that Ram Newaz was present but probably did not take a prominent part in the assault. Ram Newaz gave his age as twenty years in the Magistrate's Court. At the trial he said he was sixteen years old. His exact age is not clear, but we may take it that he is a young man approaching twenty years in age.

He called two witnesses to establish his alibi, one a Brahman and one an Arack, from the village of Tam Bani where his maternal uncles live. They say that one and a half months prior to their giving evidence the accused went to the village and stayed some twenty or twenty-two days with his uncle. Their village is some sixteen miles from the scene of the murder.

In addition to the reasons given by the Sessions Judge for not accepting this evidence, there is the fact that it is of a very vague and unreliable nature, and in the face of the clear evidence for the prosecution we are unable to accept it. We agree with the Judge that Ram Newaz was present and took part in the assault. The witnesses ascribe to him the same action as to the other two accused. Being the youngest of the three brothers, he may perhaps have been led into the matter by them, but we fail utterly to understand why the lower court acquitted him. He was present and actively aiding and abetting his brothers. The mere suggestion that he probably did not take a prominent part as the Sessions Judge has put it, is no good reason for acquittal, and we have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that Ram Newaz was present and did take part, using his lathi to beat the deceased. It is urged, on his behalf, that he can only be held guilty of an offence under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code and our attention is called to the decisions reported in Emperor v. Bhola Singh (1), Queen-Empress v. Duma Baidya (2) and Gouridas Namasudra v. Emperor (1), Empress v. Dharam Rai (2), Dhian Singh v. King-Emperor (3). In this respect, we must point out that the facts and circumstances of cases vary and each case has to be decided in view of its actual facts. We have pointed out that the deceased was cruelly and mercilessly beaten by three men armed [511] with lathis, who continued to use their weapons upon him after he had fallen to the ground. The lathi is a lethal weapon, as has been held more than once by this Court. The circumstances of the case leave no doubt in our minds that the assailants either intended to cause death or had every reason to know that the probable result of their joint act would be death. It is pleaded that there had been no premeditation and that the attack was made suddenly, directly the assailants caught sight of the deceased. Whether there was or was not premeditation is perhaps not clear, but there was concerted action and the attack was so ferocious as to lead almost to the inference that it had been premeditated.

In any event, we cannot hold that the assailants could not have contemplated or did not contemplate that the result of their action would be death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.

The death was not necessarily the result of any single blow. It was the result of the many blows inflicted on the head.

In this respect we would call attention to the decision in King-Emperor v. Subbappa Chunnappa (4). In the present case, as in the reported case, the attack was a single indivisible thing.

The facts of the present case are very similar to those of Emperor v. Kanhai (5). The using of lethal weapons in the manner in which they were used in the present case leaves no room for doubting that the assailants intended to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. They must, in the present case, have known that death would probably result, even if they had not fully intended to cause death, though indications of such an intention are not by any means absent. The assault was an act of revenge and carried out brutally and savagely. We have no hesitation in holding that Ram Newaz is guilty of murder. In regard to sentence, the Crown does not press for the extreme penalty. The accused is a youth who was, no doubt, led into the matter by his two elder brothers, and we agree that the ends of justice will be met by imposing the lesser of the two sentences allowed by the law. We allow the appeal and set aside the acquittal of Ram Newaz. We convict him of murder under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentence him to transportation for life.

NANDAN SINGH (Plaintiff) v. GANGA PRASAD (Defendant).*

[18th July, 1913.]

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), section 34—Defendant in possession of land without consent of owner—Ejectment of defendant through Revenue Court—Subsequent suit for rent—Cause of action—Misjoinder of causes of action—Civil Procedure Code (1908), order II, rule 2.

On a partition of certain revenue paying property some land which fell to the plaintiff's share remained in possession of the defendant, who refused to vacate it. The plaintiff sued the defendant for ejectment in the Revenue Court. The defendant pleaded that he was an ex-proprietary tenant, but the Court held him to be a non-occupancy tenant and ejected him. The plaintiff then brought the present suit under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, for rent of the land held by the defendant during the period prior to his ejectment as land occupied by the defendant without the plaintiff's consent.

Held, that the defendant, being in occupation of the land without the consent of the plaintiff, was liable to pay rent therefor, under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act, and further that the claim could be maintained notwithstanding that the defendant was not in possession at the date of the suit. Sheo Gopal Pande v. Thakur Baldeo Singh (1) distinguished.

Held further, that the suit was not barred by reason of the plaintiff, having in his previous suit for ejectment treated the defendant as a tenant.

Held also, that the plaintiff's cause of action under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act was no part of his cause of action to recover possession of the property, and could not be joined in the previous suit, and the present suit was, therefore, not barred by the provision of the Code of Civil Procedure, order II, rule 2.

[Ref. 29 I. C. 565; 60 I. C. 65]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The plaintiff and the defendant were co-sharers in a village. Disputes arose between them which were referred to arbitration. An award followed, in terms of which the property was divided. The property in suit fell to the share of the plaintiff, and it was decided that one co-sharer would have no right in the share of the other. The award was made a rule of court and a decree was passed in accordance therewith. The defendant continued in possession of the property in suit contrary to the terms of the decree. The plaintiff then brought a suit for the ejectment of the defendant in the Revenue Court under sections 58 and 63 of the [513] Agra Tenancy Act. The Revenue Court decreed that suit. In that suit the defendant pleaded that he was an ex-proprietary tenant, but the court held him to be a non-occupancy tenant. The present suit was then brought by the plaintiff under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, for recovery of arrears of rent for the period during which the defendant was in possession prior to ejectment. The court of first instance decreed the suit, but the lower appellate court dismissed it on the ground that the plaintiff, having ejected the defendant, as a tenant, could not now turn round and sue him as a person in occupation of the land without his consent. The plaintiff appealed.

Munshi Parshotam Das Tandan (with him The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the appellant, submitted that the defendant, having held the land of the plaintiff, was bound to pay rent therefor. He was, no doubt, a trespasser, but he could not be ejected as a non-occupancy tenant; Balli v. Naubat Singh (1). This was a suit under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act. Under that section "rent" could be recovered from a person who remained in possession against the consent of the landlord. Rent is only paid by a tenant. It follows, therefore, that a person who remains in possession against the consent of the landlord is his tenant. The defendant remainad in possession of the plaintiff's land and must pay compensation for use and occupation.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala (with him Munshi Girdhari Lal Agarwala), for the respondent, submitted that the defendant was not a tanant, and the Revenue Court could not pass a decree for rent against him. He was only a trespasser, and a suit for his ejectment and for mesne profits should have been brought in the civil court. If a decree for rent was passed against him it would be holding a trespasser to be a tenant. Where no rent is fixed before ejectment it cannot be fixed after ejectment; Kamta Prasad v. Panna Lal (2), Sheo Gopal Pande v. Thakur Baldeo Singh (3). In the first suit the plaintiff sued the defendant as his tenant, and the present suit under section 34 is not maintainable. That section applies where a suit for compensation is brought against a person who is in possession at the date of the suit. Then again, the plaintiff [514] should have claimed rent in the previous suit, and having failed to claim it the present is barred by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, order II, rule 2, which apply to Revenue Courts also (See section 193, Agra Tenancy Act). The present claim arises out of the same cause of action as the previous suit. The omission to sue for rent in the previous suit is fatal to this suit; Mewa Kuar v. Banarsi Prasad (4), Lalji Mal v. Hulasi (5), Debi Dial Singh v. Ajaib Singh (6), Venkoba v. Subbanna (7), Maksud Ali v. Nargis Dye (8).

RICHARDS, C.J., and BANERJI and TUDBALL, JJ.:—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted in the Revenue Court to recover a sum of money claimed to be payable as arrears of rent under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The facts have been very clearly ascertained and are as follows. The plaintiff and the defendant or their predecessors in title were co-sharers. Disputes arose between them, which resulted in an arbitration award and a decree in accordance therewith. Under that decree the plaintiff became entitled to the property in respect of which the present claim is made not withstanding that the defendant had previously been in possession and occupation of this particular land. Under the arbitration award and the decree following it the defendant had to give it up to the plaintiff. He did not do so. A suit for his ejectment was then instituted in the Revenue Court. In this suit the defendant was described as a cultivator, but in the body of the plaint the actual facts were set out as stated above. The arbitration proceedings were referred to, the decree which followed on the award was mentioned, as also the fact that the defendant had insisted upon remaining in possession though many times asked by the plaintiff to give up possession. The defence was not that the defendant was a proprietor, but that he was the ex-proprietary tenant and not liable to be ejected. He based his claim to be ex-proprietary tenant on the allegation that the land in dispute had been his sir before the arbitration proceedings. The award had already decided that the land was not his sir nor his khudkasht, and the Revenue Court gave a decree to eject the defendant, holding that he was a non-occupancy tenant.

[515] The present suit has now been instituted under section 34 of the Tenancy Act. The court of first instance ascertained the amount which it thought fair and equitable to be paid by the defendant under the circumstances. The lower appellate court reversed the decree of the court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Hence the present appeal. 35 A. 512=11 A. L. J. 786 =20 I.C. 892.

Section 34 is as follows :—

" A person occupying land, without the consent of the land-holder, shall be liable for the rent of that land at the rate payable in the previous year, or, if rent was not payable in the previous year, at such rate as the court may determine to be fair and equitable, but he shall not be deemed to hold the land within the meaning of section 11 until he begins to pay rent therefor."

The appellant contends that there is no doubt that the defeneant was a person occupying his land without his consent and that, therefore, he was bound to pay compensation at a fair and equitable rate which has been ascertained by the court of first instance. The respondent urges, on the other hand, that the plaintiff having sued the defendant in the Revenue Court as a tenant, cannot now recover rent from him under section 34 as a person occupying the land "without his consent." He further contends that the plaintiff, in the previous suit to recover possession, was bound to make the claim for rent under the provisions of order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and lastly, that compensation or rent under section 34 can only be recovered against the person who is still in occupation of the land at the time of the institution of the suit.

The wording of section 34 is certainly somewhat peculiar. In England there is a well known form of action, viz., the action for use and occupation. In such a case where no rent has been fixed and the land is occupied with the permission of the owner, an action for use and occupation lies, and where the ownership of the plaintiff is proved as well as the occupation by the defendant, prima facie it will be assumed that there was a contract by the defendant to pay reasonable compensation for the occupation. Section 34, however, provides that a person who occupies the land without permission shall be liable to pay rent therefor. We are bound to construe the section according to the plain words used.

[516] We now come to the question whether the proceedings in the Revenue Court, which ended in the ejectment of the defendant, can be said to bar the present claim. We have already pointed out that in bringing these proceedings the plaintiff clearly and distinctly stated the real facts of the case and that the defendant was in possession against his consent. There can be little doubt that on the facts of the present case, as now ascertained, the most appropriate remedy for the plaintiff to have taken would have been a suit in the civil court for recovery of possession, coupled with a claim for mesne profits. It is quite unnecessary for the purposes of the present appeal to decide whether or not, under the circumstances of the present case, the Revenue Court had power to eject the defendant. It is quite clear that unless the relationship of landlord and tenant exists, the Revenue Court has no power to eject. It is, therefore, quite possible that the decree of the Revenue Court was erroneous, but this is not a matter which we have to decide in this appeal. In our opinion, the proceedings which the plaintiff did take cannot be said to bar the present suit on the ground that he was treating the defendant as his tenant. He set out the actual facts as already mentioned and in his plaint as well as his evidence stated the fact that the defendant was holding in spite of him and against his will. Under the circumstances, the rulings which have been cited during the course of the arguments have no application.

We now come to the third point, viz., whether it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to join in his previous suit the present claim. Order II, rule 2, is as follows :—

" Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, &c."

It is urged that part of the plaintiff's cause of action was his present claim under section 34 and that, therefore, he should have included it in his claim.

In our opinion, the plaintiff's cause of action under section 34 was no part of his cause of action to recover possession of the property, assuming the claim to be regarded as a claim for arrears of rent. The very words of rule 4 of the same order show that a claim for rent is not on the same cause of action as the claim for possession. Rule 4 is as follows :—" No cause of action [517] shall, unless with the leave of the court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property, except (a) claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed or any part thereof (b) claims for damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held, and (c) claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action." This rule shows that, but for these exceptions, claims for mesne profits and for arrears of rent could not be joined with a suit to recover possession of immovable property except with the leave of the court. It further shows that claims for mesne profits and arrears of rent are regarded as different causes of action. The inconvenience of holding that claims for rent under section 34 are based on the same cause of action as claims for ejectment is illustrated by the fact that under the Tenancy Act the court which hears an ejectment suit would, in some cases, and would not in others, be the same as the court which hears a suit for arrears of rent. The court of appeal also in one case is not the same as in the other. We may also observe that this point was not raised either in the court of first instance or in the grounds of appeal to the lower appellate court.

As to the last point, we think it is quite clear that a claim can be made, notwithstanding that the person has ceased to be in occupation. The case of Sheo Gopal Pande v. Thakur Baldeo Singh (1) has no bearing on the present case. In our opinion, the plaintiff was entitled to make a claim under section 34. As no rent had been paid in the previous year, the court was bound to determine what sum would be fair and equitable. We find that the court of first instance fixed the sum at Rs. 240 a year. It based its decision upon a decree for profits of the very same land, between the parties on a former occasion. The lower appellate court did not decide the question. We do not think that the rent to be paid by the defendant could have been fixed upon any more equitable basis than that adopted by the court of first instance. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate court and restore that of the court of first instance. The appellant will have his costs in all courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), order XXXIV, rule 14—Execution of decree—Usufructuary mortgage—Suit for possession of mortgaged property—Decree for possession and costs—Execution for costs by attachment of part of mortgaged property.

Certain usufructuary mortgagees suing for possession of the mortgaged property, which had not been delivered to them, obtained a decree for possession and for costs. In execution of their decree for costs the mortgagees applied for attachment of part of the mortgaged property. Held that this application was not barred by the provisions of order XXXIV, rule 14, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Khiarajmal v. Daim (1) distinguished. Muhammad Abdul Rashid Khan v. Dilsukh Rai (2) referred to.

[Ref. 50 I. C. 134=17 A. L. J. 481=41 All. 399.]

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The appellants and their predecessors in title executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of one Subba Rai on the 3rd of October, 1887. The mortgage was assigned to Sri Niwas Rai Kalia and others, the respondents. Part of the property mortgaged was in the possession of prior mortgagees and the mortgagors also held mortgagee rights in other property which they included in the mortgage. In regard to those two descriptions of property, it was provided in the mortgage that the mortgagors would redeem the prior mortgage and foreclose the mortgage held by them and then deliver possession to their mortgagee, Subba Rai. The mortgagors complied with the terms of the mortgage so far that they redeemed the prior mortgage and the mortgage held by them, but they did not deliver possession foreclosed to the mortgagee. Thereupon the assignees of the mortgagee brought a suit for possession and obtained a decree, which awarded them costs. In execution of this decree for costs, they applied for attachment of the mortgaged property, that is, of the equity of redemption of the mortgagors in respect of the said property. The appellants objected to the attachment on the ground that it would contravene the provisions of order XXXIV, rule 14, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that as the mortgagees are in possession under the [519] mortgage, they were not entitled to bring to sale the mortgagors' rights. This objection was overruled by the court below, and the mortgagors thereupon appealed to the High Court.

property, it was provided in the mortgage that the mortgagors would redeem the prior mortgage and foreclose the mortgage held by them and then deliver possession to their mortgagee, Subba Rai. The mortgagors complied with the terms of the mortgage so far that they redeemed the prior mortgages and foreclosed the mortgages held by them, but they did not deliver possession to the mortgagee. Thereupon the assignees of the mortgagee brought a suit for possession and obtained a decree, which awarded them costs. In execution of the decree for costs, they have applied for attachment of the mortgaged property, that is, of the equity of redemption of the mortgagors in respect of the said property. The appellants objected to the attachment on the ground that it would contravene the provisions of order XXXIV, rule 14, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that as the mortgagees are in possession under the mortgage, they are not entitled to bring to sale the mortgagors' rights. This objection having been overruled by the court below, this appeal has been preferred, and the same plea has been reiterated in the appeal. In our opinion, the decision of the court below is right. Rule 14 of order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that " where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage." The question is whether the [520] decree in this case is " a decree for the repayment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage." While it is contended on behalf of the appellant that as the decree for costs was passed in a suit brought in connection with the mortgage, and is, therefore, a decree in respect of a claim arising under the mortgage, it is urged, on the other hand, that the claim which the decree-holder seeks to satisfy is not a claim arising under the mortgage,but a claim arising under a decree passed for costs. In our opinion, this latter contention is correct. Rule 14 seems to us to provide for cases in which the decree-holder seeks to satisfy a claim which he could enforce by virtue of his mortgage. This rule, in our opinion, gives effect to the principle of equity refered to by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khiarajmal v. Daim (1) in the following terms :— "Their Lordships throw no doubt on the principle, which has been acted on in many cases in India, that the mortgagee cannot, by obtaining a money decree for the mortgage-debt, and taking the equity of redemption in execution, relieve himself of his obligations as mortgagee, or deprive the mortgagor of his rights to redeem on accounts taken, and with the other safeguards usual in a suit on the mortgage." In the present case the suit which the decree-holders brought was no doubt a suit relating to the mortgage, but the costs awarded were costs which could only be realized by virtue of the decree made by the court and the claim for the costs is not a claim which arose under the mortgage. The case is in some respects similar to that of Muhammad Abdul Rashid Khan v. Dilsukh Rai (2). The learned counsel for the appellants also urged that under the terms of the mortgage deed the costs in question might be regarded as part of the mortgage money. We have considered the terms of the mortgage, and it is clear that the costs referred to in that document are costs relating to the redemption of prior mortgages or to the obtaining of mutation of names in respect of the mortgaged property which the mortgagees might incur as against third parties or in making applications themselves for entry of their names. This document does not contemplate costs of the description of costs now sought to be realized. The costs incurred by a mortgagee [521] which might be deemed to be a part of the mortgage money are the costs referred to in rule 10 of order XXXIV, i. e. the costs of a suit for a decree for foreclosure, or sale or redemption. The costs awarded in the present case are not costs of this description, and therefore they could not be deemed to be a part of the mortgage money which the mortgagees were entitled to realize from the mortgaged property.

Whether the mortgagees should be permitted to bid for and purchase at the sale to be held in execution of their decree, is a matter which the court executing the decree should consider in the event of the mortgagees applying for leave to bid, but in our opinion, their prayer for sale of the mortgagor's rights in the mortgaged property has been rightly allowed, and this appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Act (Local) No. II of 1901 (Agra Tenancy Act), section 199 —Civil and Revenue Courts —Jurisdiction—Appeal—Question of proprietary right

The plaintiff sued in the Revenue Court to eject the defendant alleging that the land in suit was his occupancy holding and that the defendant was his sub-tenant. The defendant pleaded that he was a co-sharer in the village and that the land in suit was his khud-kasht. Held that no question of proprietary title was raised by the pleadings, and that no appeal therefore lay to the District Judge from the order of the Assistant Collector who had decided the case in the first instance. Dal Chand v. Shamla (1) dissented from.

[Over. 36 All. 183 (F.B.)]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

The plaintiff alleged that he was occupancy tenant of a certain plot and that the defendant had taken that plot, for purposes of cultivation, as sub-tenant from him. It was admitted by the plaintiff that the defendant was the proprietor of practically the whole village. The plaintiff brought this suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court. The defendant pleaded that he did not take the land as a sub-tenant of the plaintiff, but that he was cultivating it as a proprietor, as his khud-kasht. The Assistant [522] Collector held that the defendant, though a proprietor, had taken the land from the plaintiff as sub-tenant and decreed the claim. On the defendant's appeal to the District Judge the lower appellate court, without deciding the preliminary objection raised by the plaintiff that no appeal lay to that court, reversed the decree, holding that the defendant had not taken

Babu Piari Lal Banerji, for the appellant :—

The learned Judge has erred in deciding the appeal before him, without deciding the plaintiff's preliminary objection that no appeal lay. An appeal would lie to him, if a question of proprietary title was in issue before the court of first instance and before him. In this case, no question of proprietary title was ever in issue. The plaintiff claimed no proprietary title himself nor ever denied the defendant's proprietary title. The plaintiff alleged a specific contract of tenancy and that was the only question that arose in the case. If the tenancy was proved, the plaintiff would succeed. If the tenancy was not proved, the defendant's possession would prevail. The defendant was admittedly in possession and his allegation that he was in possession as proprietor was a mere surplusage. It practically amounted simply to a denial of the alleged tenancy and thus the only question in issue was whether the allged contract of tenancy was proved. No appeal, therefore, lay to the District Judge. The case of Dal Chand v. Shamla (1) was wrongly decided and should not have been followed.

Pandit Ladli Prasad Zutshi (with him Pandit Mohan Lal Nehru), for the respondent:—

The case reported in 2 A. L. J. 176, is exactly in point and is a Division Bench ruling. The defendant by pleading that he was in possession as proprietor, did raise a question of proprietary title which the Assistant Collector could have referred to a Civil Court for decision under the provisions of section 199 of the [523] Tenancy Act. If the defendant was directed to bring a suit in the Civil Court for declaration of his proprietary right, he could not have been met by the plaintiff with an allegation that there was no need for such a declaration as his proprietary right was not denied. Possession, as proprietor, was denied and that raised a question of proprietary title.

Babu Piari Lal Banerji, not heard in reply.

TUDBALL and PIGGOTT, JJ. :—This is a second appeal by the plaintiff, whose suit for recovery of possession was decreed by an Assistant Collector of the Gorakhpur district, but has been dismissed by the District Judge of Gorakhpur on appeal. The question is whether an appeal lay, under the circumstances, to the court of the District Judge. The plaintiff alleged that the land in suit was his occupancy holding and that he had sub-let it to the defendant, whom he now desires to eject by a suit under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act for that purpose. The defendant replied that he was a co-sharer in the mahal and held the land in suit as his khudkasht. We cannot see that the defendant's title as proprietor was ever denied by the plaintiff. Certainly the latter never claimed to be himself the proprietor of the land in dispute or to have any right in the same, other than the right of an occupancy tenant. Under the circumstances it appears to us impossible to say that a question of proprietary title was raised by the pleadings. We have been referred in argument to the provisions of section 199 of the Tenancy Act. According to that section where, in a suit like the present, a question of proprietary title is raised by the defendant, the Revenue Court may either determine the question of title itself or require the defendant to institute a suit in the Civil Court for the determination of the same. If the Assistant Collector had begun by holding that the present was a case to which the provisions of section 199 aforesaid applied, and had required the defendant to institute a suit in the Civil Court, that suit would have been one for a declaration that the defendant was the proprietor, or one of the proprietors, of the land in suit, in the sense of being a co-sharer in the mahal to which this land appertains. Such a suit, so far as we can gather, would have been met by the present plaintiff with a plea that he never had denied, or was disposed to deny, the defendant's proprietary [524] title. There is a ruling of this Court which is in favour of the respondent in this case, namely, Dal Chand v. Shamla (1). With all respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, it seems to us that they failed to distinguish between the case of pleadings by which a question of proprietary title is raised and that of pleadings which merely raise a question as to the nature of the defendant's possession. In the present case, what the plaintiff had to prove in order to succeed was that he, as occupancy tenant, let the land in suit to the defendant, and even though the latter be a co-sharer in the mahal to which the land appertains or even the sole proprietor of that mahal, there would be nothing illegal in such a contract of tenancy as was alleged by the plaintiff. The point thus raised was one the decision of which is within the province of the Revenue Court, and, as we are unable to hold that any question of proprietary title was raised before the Assistant Collector, was determined by that court or was in issue before the District Judge, we must hold that no appeal lay in this case to the latter court. We, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the order and decree of the lower appellate court and direct the District Judge of Gorakhpur in lieu thereof, to return the petition of appeal presented to his court for presentation to the proper court. The appellant will get his costs in this Court and in the lower appellate court.

(1) (1905) 2 A. L. J. 176.

Appeal allowed.

[525] The facts of this case were as follows :—

On the 22nd of June, 1910, Bhawani Singh obtained a decree against Mumtaz Ahmad and others for recovery, by sale of the mortgaged property, of Rs. 2,291-8-0, the amount due on the mortgage. On the 21st of October, 1911, he sold the decree to Sri Ram by an unregistered deed, for Rs. 1,500. Sri Ram applied for substitution of his name in place of the decree-holders, and without any objection on the part of the judgment-debtors, his name was brought on the record under order XXI, rule 16. The assignee applied on the 15th of May, 1912, for execution of the decree transferred to him. The judgment-debtors objected on the ground that the sale-deed, being unregistered, was inoperative and the assignee could not execute the decree. The first court overruled the objection and held that the transfer of a mortgage decree need not be registered. On appeal, the District Judge confirmed the order of the first court. The judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

Maulvi Shafi-uz-zaman, for the appellants :—

The deed of assignment under which the decree was transferred from the original decree-holders to the present respondents was one which conveyed certain interests in immovable property, for it gave to the vendee the right to get the property sold through the intervention of the court. This right is certainly an interest in immovable property within the meaning of section 17, clause (b), of the Registration Act, and, as such, the registration of the sale deed was compulsory under the provisions of that section. He relied on Gopal Narayan v. Trimbak Sadashiv (3), Mutwaddi Lal v. Muhammad Hanif (4), Abdul Majid v. Muhammad Faizullah (1), Ram Ratan Chakerbutty v. Johesh Chandra Bhattacharya (5), Ramasami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari (6).

Mr. Nihal Chand for the respondents, was not called upon.

TUDBALL and PIGGOTT JJ.:—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. A final decree for sale was obtained under order XXXIV, rule 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure, in respect of certain property. The decree-holder assigned all his rights and interests under the decree to the present respondent by an unregistered deed. The assignee applied to be brought on the record [526] in place of the decree-holder. Notice was issued to the judgement-debtors. After several attempts to serve them personally had failed, substituted service was allowed and an order under order XXI, rule 16, was passed in favour of the assignee. The assignee then applied for execution of the decree. Thereupon the judgement-debtors raised an objection that the deed of sale being unregistered, the assignee had no title and therefore could not execute the decree. The courts below, relying on the decisions in Abdul Majid v. Muhammad Faizullah (1) and in Baij Nath Lohea v. Binoyendra Nath Palit (2) dismissed the objections. Hence the present appeal. On behalf of the appellants it is urged that the deed in question transferred to the assignee an interest in immovable property and therefore in view of section 17 (b) and section 49, clause (a), of the Registration Act, the assignee has no interest. Reliance was placed on Gopal Narayan v. Trimbak Sadashiv (1) and Mutsaddi Lal v. Muhammad Hanif (2). Of these two, the former decision was passed in 1876, and the judgement gives no reason for the decision. In regard to the latter, it is not in point at all. That case related to the transfer of the rights of the mortgagees under the mortgage-deed by means of an unregistered document. In our opinion, this appeal must fail. In the first place, the proper occasion for the appellants to take this objection was on the application of the assignee for an order under order XXI rule 16. In the next place in view of the decisions in I. L. R., 13 All., p. 89, I. L. R., 23 Cal., p. 450 and 6 C. W. N. p 5, it seems to us that there is no force in this appeal. The latter case is on all fours with the case now before us. A decree not being immovable property, it has been held in the Calcutta cases noted above that the transfer of a decree does not operate to create an interest in immovable property and the deed of transfer is, therefore, not compulsorily registrable. In our opinion, the appeal must fail, and we dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

plaintiff applied to the Revenue Court for imperfect partition of her share. Pema and the sons and representatives of Gaila, the deceased brother, objected, saying that the name of the plaintiff was entered by way of consolation, that she was allowed to realize the rents and profits of the particular share in lieu of maintenance allowance, and that she could not have the share partitioned. The Revenue Court disallowed the objections of the defendants, but held that the property in dispute was given to the plaintiff for her support. On appeal, the District Judge confirmed the decree of the Revenue Court on the ground that the plaintiff, being a recorded co-sharer, [528] could claim partition. But he also came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was allowed her husband's share, on the death of Mohan Singh, in lieu of maintenance and by way of consolation. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sarat Chandra Chaudhri (for Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji), for the appellant:—

The finding of the lower appellate court is that the respondent is in possession in lieu of maintenance and by way of consolation. It is submitted that such possession is not enough to entitle her to claim partition under section 107 of the Land Revenue Act. She must not only be 'recorded' but she must be a co-sharer. By the term 'co-sharer' the Legislature intends a 'person' who has absolute control over the share in his or her possession. The respondent in this case is in possession on sufferance, the true owner being the appellant. She is not a co-sharer, Bhoop Singh v. Phool Kower (1). The applicant's position differs from that of a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's separate share. Such a widow can claim partition because she represents the estate fully and whatever may be the effect of an alienation made by her after her death, there is none to dispute it as long as she is alive.

It is also true that the applicant could maintain a suit for the profits of the share recorded in her name, but that is because of the presumption, which is irrebuttable, created by the provisions of section 201 of the Tenancy Act No such presumption can be imported into the Land Revenue Act. In fact under section 111, the courts are not precluded from inquiring into the question of proprietary title. If she has difficulty in collecting the profits, she may resort to the Civil Court and get her maintenance allowance fixed and declared a charge upon the estate. But she cannot by her act bring about change in the character of the family property. A application for partition under the Land Revenue Act, when objected to, becomes a suit in the Civil Court, and it has been held that a widow in possession in lieu of maintenance cannot sue for partition; Kathaperumal v. Venkabai (3), Sundar v. Parbat (4).

[529] In one case also the Privy Council allowed widows, who were jointly in possession, to enter into a partition, but that case was decided upon the principle of the well-known case of Asher v. Whitlock (5), that possessory title was good as against the whole world except the true owner. Here the true owner has appeared to oppose the application, and as against him the prayer for partition cannot be allowed. There are a series of rulings which go to show that a Hindu widow in the position of the respondent is not a co-sharer to as to put forward a claim for pre-emption; Bhupal Singh v. Mohan Singh (1), Phopi Ram v. Rukmin Kuar (2).

It is therefore submitted that the respondent is out of court.

Munshi Parmeshwar Dayal (for the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the respondent: —

The question which has to be decided in this case is whether a Hindu widow who is placed in possession of her husband's share, in lieu of maintenance, is entitled to claim partition under the Land Revenue Act. A partition under that Act is different in effect from a partition by a Civil Court of joint property, under the Hindu Law. The former does not necessarily break the joint character of the family, whereas the only object of the latter is the separation of the family property and dissolution of the joint family. The members of the family would be as much entitled to the profits after a Revenue Court partition as they were before the partition. The only requisite under section 107 of the Land Revenue Act is that the person applying for partition must be a recorded co-sharer. The widow in the present case having been recorded as a co-sharer was entitled to claim partition. Her position, although she was in possession in lieu of maintenance, is analogous to that of a Hindu widow inheriting her husband's separate property under the Hindu Law. The only difference is that the former gets the property by virtue of some grant or family arrangement, whereas the latter gets the property by right of inheritance. In both cases the interest which vests in the widow is for her life. She cannot be ousted during her life-time nor can she be compelled to accept maintenance in any other form, if she is already in possession of her husband's share in lieu of her maintenance; Yellawa v. Bhimangada (3); Mayne's [530] Hindu Law, 7th Edition, paragraphs 395, 396 and 397. The law applicable to a Hindu widow entitling her to claim partition under the Revenue Law would be quite applicable to a case like the present. This case approaches very nearly the case reported in I. L. R. 3 All. 400, which was a case of a Hindu widow claiming partition under the Revenue Act. The case of Bhoop Singh v. Phool Kower (4) relied on by the other side, is not to the point, inasmuch as the facts of the case, as set forth in the judgment; do not disclose whether the woman claiming partition in that case, was a "recorded co-sharer." Moreover the law applicable to partition there was materially different from the present law. In Act XIX of 1863, section 3, the words used were "recorded proprietor," and not "recorded co-sharer." The latter terms were brought in for the first time in Act XIX of 1873. A proprietor may be a co-sharer but all co-sharers are not proprietors. Besides, a Hindu widow who is in possession of property in lieu of maintenance, holds a charge over the property in her possession and the charge, will hold good for her life-time; Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th Edition, paragraph 460 In this aspect the present case is governed by the case of Habibullah v. Musammat Kushimba (5).

Babu Sarat Chandar Chaudhri in reply :—

The case of Habibullah v. Musammat Kushimba was one of a Muhammadan widow in possession of her husband's property in lieu of her dower. Her right was a much higher right than that of a Hindu widow in possession of property in lieu of maintenance. Moreover in Act XIX of 1863, section 3, the word 'proprietor' was used where the word 'co-sharer' now occurs, and, there being no substantial change in the law on that point, it may be taken that the word 'proprietor' was used synonymously with the word "co-sharer."

RYVES and PIGGOTT, JJ.:—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows:—Mohan Singh was the owner of some zamindari property. He had three sons, Prem Singh, Gaila and Pema. Prem Singh died in the life-time of his father, leaving surviving him a widow, Musammat Jas Kunwar (plaintiff respondent). After the death of Mohan Singh, his property was recorded in the [531] names of Gaila, Musammat JasKunwar and Pema. Subsequently Gaila died and the names of his widow and sons were recorded in the khewat instead of his own name. On the 13th of November, 1911, Musammat Jas Kunwar instituted a suit in the Revenue Court for imperfect partition in respect of a one-third share of the property which had originally belonged to Mohan Singh, stating in her plaint that she was "the owner, zamindar and co-sharer of one-third out of one-fourth share in the holdings bearing khewat Nos. 22, 23 and 33 in mauza Nehru," and was in possession thereof. The reason for seeking partition, she alleged, was because there were constant disputes between the parties owing to the property being joint. Pema, defendant appellant, objected under section 111 of the Revenue Act, on the ground that Musammat Jas Kunwar's name had been entered in the Revenue papers merely for her consolation, and that she was not in possession as a co-sharer, but had been receiving maintenance only, and that was all that she was entitled to.

The first court framed, among others, two issues, as to the entry of Musammat Jas Kunwar's name in the khewat and as to her possession. That court decided both these issues in the plaintiff's favour and disallowed Pema's objection. On appeal the learned District Judge found as follows:—

"It appears that Musammat Jas Kunwar has been in possession of her husband's share, and I find accordingly. As her husband predeceased her father-in-law, it appears that she was allowed her husband's share on her father-in-law's death, in lieu of maintenance and by way of consolation and she was recorded at Mohan Singh's death as a co-sharer. She is entitled then to partition of the share recorded in her name. It is clear that Musammat Jas Kunwar has not absolute ownership." He dismissed the appeal.

It has been contended before us that, on the facts found, Musammat Jas Kunwar is not entitled to partition, because she cannot be said to be a co-sharer, and the mere fact that she is recorded in the khewat as such, does not make her a co-sharer. It is argued that she has not even the limited estate of a Hindu widow in possession of her deceased husband's share. As her husband died in the life-time of her father-in-law, the utmost that she was entitled to, [532] was maintenance, and the findings of the court below amount to nothing more than this, that the family, instead of paying her a certain sum annually, put her in possession of a share of the family property in lieu of maintenance.

No doubt her brothers-in-law, the real co-sharers of the property, might have agreed to give her an absolute title to the share which would have belonged to her husband, if he had been living, or any other share, but the finding of the lower appellate court that she has not an absolute ownerships, shows that this was not done.

In our opinion this contention is correct. Under section 107 of the Revenue Act, a recorded co-sharer of a mahal may apply for partition to the Revenue court. On such application being properly made, the Collector is required to issue a proclamation calling on the other recorded co-shares in the mahal to appear and state their objection, if any, to the partition. If objection is made by a recorded co-sharer the court may: under section 111, if the objection involves a question of proprietary title which has not already been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, inquire into the merits of the objection. This shows that the mere fact that the applicant for partition is recorded as a co-sharer, and has been in possession of his share, does not entitle him to obtain partition. If a person, although recorded as a co-sharer and in possession, is proved not to be in fact a co-sharer, the court cannot make a partition in his favour. This view was adopted as long ago as 1867 in the case of Bhoop Singh v. Phool Kower (1). There it was held that the proprietary right to a share in an undivided estate, which includes and carries with it a right to claim and enforce a partition of that share, must be a right of absolute and unlimited nature, and does not belong to a Hindu widow who has been placed in possession of her deceased husband's share for her maintenance. Consequently where the widow is not an absolute proprietor, but simply an assignee of the profits for her maintenance, she cannot claim partition of the share so assigned.

Act No. XIX of 1863 was in force when that case was decided. We have examined its provisions and find that they are substantially the same as in the present Revenue Act; only there the term "proprietor" is used instead of "co-sharer." But in our opinion, [533] more especially having regard to section 111 of the present Act, we think the two words are synonymous. That decision was considered in Jhunna Kuar v. Chain Sukh (2), where it was affirmed, although a distinction was drawn between a widow who was not an absolute proprietor but simply an assignee of the profits for her maintenance, and a childless Hindu widow who had succeeded to her deceased husband's share in a mahal, such share having been his separate property, and was recorded as a co-sharer in the mahal.

On behalf of the respondent, we were pressed with the decision in Habibulla v. Musammat Kushimba (3). That case, in our opinion, has no application here. There a Muhammadan widow in possession of her deceased husband's property in lieu of her dower, and who was recorded as a co-sharer, sought partition. An objection was raised by one Habibulla, who was not himself a recorded co-sharer, on the ground that the widow's possession was analogous to that of a mortgagee, and that therefore under the proviso to section 107 she was not entitled to partition. On appeal this Court only decided two points; and that case is therefore only an authority for what it actually decided. It held (1) that Habibulla not being a recorded co-sharer, could not rise objectin under section 111, and (2) that the widow was not a mortgagee within the meaning of section 107. The very point we have to decide has come up for determination before another Bench of this Court since the arguments before us were concluded in Musammat Kailashi Kunwar v. Badri Prasad [S. A. No. 344 of 1913, decided on the 17th of July, 1913, by the learned Chief Justice and Banerji, J.]. The facts of that case are on all fours with the case before us and we are fortified in our opinion by that decision.

In Bhupal Singh v. Mohan Singh (1) this Court, relying on two previous decisions of Phopi Ram v. Rukmin Kuar (2) and Imam-ud-din v. Surjaitn (3),has held that a Hindu widow in possession in lieu of maintenance, and recorded as a "co-sharer," was not entitled to sue for preemption as a "co-sharer" in the mahal.

The result is we allow the appeal, and, setting aside the decrees of the courts below, dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all courts.

BALWANT SINGH AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. GAYAN SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[1st August, 1913].

Mortgage—Interest—Construction of document—Mortgage by conditional sale with no provision for post diem interest—Post diem interest not allowed.

A mortgage executed in 1869 provided for the payment of the sum of Rs. 300 with interest at Rs. 1-8 per mensem in one lump sum upon a certain specified date four years from the date of the mortgage. It further provided that, if the money was not paid upon that date, the property mortgaged should become the absolute property of the mortgagee. There was no stipulation of any kind as to the payment of interest after the date fixed.

Held that the mortgagee was not entitled to post diem interest. Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (4) distinguished. Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (5) and Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (6) followed.

[Dist. 24 I. C. 674; Ref. 63 I. C. 533; 76 I. C. 1053 ; 79 I. C. 69].

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

Dharam Singh and Sundar Singh, the predecessors in title of defendants, executed a mortgage by conditional sale in favour of Towri Singh, the ancestor of the plaintiffs, on the 9th of March, 1869. The mortgage purported to have been executed to pay off a prior mortgage of the 14th of January, 1864, in favour of one Pem Singh. The defendants pleaded payment and absence of legal necessity to make the mortgage, but both the pleas were decided against them. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, giving six months' time to the defendants to redeem. Interest was to be calculated up to six months from the date of decree. The District Judge, however, modified the decree only allowing interest for four years, from the date, of the bond.

The terms of the bond were as below :—

"In order to pay off a previous mortgage deed I have borrowed Rs. 300 from the mortgagee and hypothecated the share of which I am the owner as security. I will repay and liquidate the loan with interest at 1-8 per mensem in one lump sum within four years. If I fail to do this, after the expiration of the appointed period, the hypothecated property may be foreclosed and sold outright."

APPELLATE CIVIL.

35 A. 534=11 A. L. J. 829=21 I. C. 253.

The learned Judge held that the intention of the parties was that no interest was to be paid after four years from the date of the bond. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

[535] Babu Sital Prasad Ghose, for the appellant:—

The relation of mortgagor and mortgagee subsists so long as the mortgage is not foreclosed, and so long as that relation subsists interest is payable. The interest is a charge upon the property. In all cases of redemption interest runs up to the date of payment and in cases of foreclosure up to the date the property is foreclosed, Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (1), Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (2). The case of Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (3) is against me, but that does not lay down the correct law. In fact a subsequent case, Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (4), does not follow that case. Even though the courts are not bound to allow the stipulated rate of interest, they have inherent power to allow interest under the Interest Act. In this case such a power should be exercised. Order XXXIV, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure also contemplates that interest should be allowed up to the date of redemption.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with him The Hon'ble Mr. Abdul Raoof), for the respondents:—

The question is whether interest is payable on this mortgage. The question of intention is material. The intention was that the property was to be absolutely conveyed if principal and interest was not paid by the end of four years. This is no contract for payment of any interest after four years, at the end of which period the property was to become the property of the mortgagee and the debt wiped off. The contract of mortgage contemplated that the debt will be extinguished either by payment or by transfer of property in lieu thereof, at the end of the term. The payment of interest post diem was not contemplated. The mortgage in question is the creation of a contract and in the absence of a stipulation in the mortgage the interest post diem (even if it were payable by way of compensation or under the provisions of Act XXXII of 1839 (Interest Act), could not be made a charge upon the property. There is no statutory provision creating such a charge for any interest payable as compensation.

RICHARDS, C.J. and PIGGOTT, J:—This appeal arises out of a suit for foreclosure. The mortgage is a very old one, being dated the 9th of March, 1869. The mortgage provided for the payment [536] of the sum of Rs. 300 with interest at 1-8 per cent. per mensem, in one lump sum upon a certain specified date, four years from the date of the mortgage. It then provided that if the money was not paid on that date the property should be the absolute property of the mortgagee. There was no stipulation of any kind for the payment of interest after the date fixed; and the mortgage, as mentioned above, was made before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. Numerous defences were raised in the courts below.

The court of first instance gave a decree for foreclosure ascertaining the interest at the sum of Rs. 3,178-4-7 together with the Rs, 300 for principal, and provided that if payment was not made on the 20th day of July, 1912, the defendants should be absolutely debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property.

The lower appellate court modified the decree of the court below to this extent that it ascertained the amount due as being Rs. 300 principal together with interest at 1-8 per cent. per mensem for four years, that is to say, Rs. 300 for principal, and Rs. 216 for interest making a total of Rs. 516. Six months were allowed for payment, during which period of six months interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum should run.

The plaintiffs come here in second appeal contending that the decree of the court of first instance was correct and that the interest should have been allowed at the contractual rate during the whole period up to the time fixed for payment. In the course of the argument the learned vakil on behalf of the appellants contended that, even if he was not allowed the contractual rate of interest he should be allowed some rate of interest under the provisions of the Interest Act.

The main proposition of the appellants is that in all cases of mortgage by conditional sale, interest at the contractual rate runs up to the time fixed for payment and that this is the necessary consequence of the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee whether the payment of interest is or is not provided for by the deed. The question is by no means free from difficulty. In the case of Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (1) it was held, under [537] circumstances which we cannot distinguish from the present, that post diem interest was not recoverable. This case was referred to and approved by the majority of the Court in the Full Bench ruling of Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (2). The question of post diem interest came before their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (3). In that case (which was one of a simple mortgage) this High Court had refused to allow post diem interest. This decision was overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council: but a perusal of the judgment shows that their Lordships based their judgment on the particular terms of the mortgage deed and in particular upon a covenant in that deed which provided that the mortgagor would not transfer the mortgaged property until the full principal and interest had been paid. The stipulations in that deed upon which their Lordships relied are entirely absent from the mortgage in the present case. Under these circumstances, we see no sufficient reason to interfere with the decision of the court below.

With regard to the point that interest should be allowed under the Interest Act, it seems extremely doubtful, having regard to the time which has elapsed since the deed was entered into, whether any interest could be reasonable under that Act, but in any event we do not think that the sum which could be awarded under that Act would be a charge on the property. In the present case, the duty of the court is to ascertain what sum is now charged on the property for principal and interest.

Under these circumstances, we think that the decision of the court below was correct, and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs. The time for payment is enlarged so as to run for four months from the date of this decree. Simple interest at 6 per cent. per annum will continue to run as decreed by the court below. The decree will not issue until the appellant or respondent has made good the deficiency.

MAHENDRA GOPAL MUKERJI (Applicant) v. LACHMAN PRASAD AND ANOTHER (Opposite parties).*

[19th May, 1913.]

Company—Winding up—Shares applied for subject to a condition, and partly paid for—Condition not fulfilled—Resolution of company to refund part-payment—Position of applicant as regards winding up proceedings.

A company started in Meerut in 1904, with objects of a very general nature, proposed in 1906 to erect a mill at Fyzabad, and accordingly issued a prospectus and invited the public to subscribe the necessary capital. On the faith of this prospectus one M. applied for shares, but added to his application a condition to the following effect:—"These shares are only subscribed on the condition that any mill is started in the suburbs of Fyzabad." The company, however, found that they could not raise the necessary funds to start a mill at Fyzabad, and therefore passed a resolution that the money already subscribed for that purpose should be refunded. But before this was done the company went into liquidation.

Held that M. was in the circumstances not a member of the company, but a creditor and entitled to get back what he had already paid.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

A company was started in Meerut in 1904, which was called the Ganga General Mills Company, Limited. Its object apparently was to carry on business of any and every description. Apparently in 1906 this company considered the advisability of starting a branch mill at Fyzabad or its suburbs. It accordingly issued a prospectus and invited the public to subscribe the necessary capital. The present applicant put in an application in the ordinary form in which the following condition was entered :—" These shares are subscribed only on condition that any mill is started in the suburbs of Fyzabad." The application was entertained by the Directors and shares were allotted, but no mill was started at Fyzabad. Subsequently, on the 27th of September, 1909, a resolution was passed by the company that " as there was no prospect of starting a branch factory at Fyzabad, the conditional share-holders may be paid." After this the company failed and went into liquidation. The present appellant's name was on the register of members, and he was called upon to pay the balance due on the shares. The court of first instance held that he was a member of the company and therefore must pay the balance due from him. The applicant thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Nihal Chand and the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondents.

TUDBALL and MUHAMMAD RAFIQ, JJ.:—These four appeals are all connected and are governed by this judgment. The facts are very briefly as follows:—A company was started in Meerut in 1904, which was called the Ganga General Mills Company, Limited. Its object apparently was to carry on business of any and every description that can be done under the sun. Apparently in 1906 this company considered the advisablity of starting a branch mill at Fyzabad or its suburbs. It accordingly issued a prospectus and invited the public to subscribe the necessary capital. The present appellant put in an application in the ordinary form in which the following condition was entered:—"These shares are subscribed only on condition that any mill is started in the suburbs of Fyzabad." The application was entertained by the Directors and shares were allotted, but no mill was started at Fyzabad. Subsequently on the 27th of September, 1909, a resolution was passed by the company that "as there was no prospect of starting a branch factory at Fyzabad, the conditional share-holders may be paid." In other words, the company, finding that it could not raise sufficient funds to carry on the business of the company at Fyzabad, made up its mind to take the only course that it could honestly take, i.e., to refund the sum it had already taken from the applicant. After this the company failed and went into liquidation. The present appellant's name was on the register of members and he was called upon to pay the balance due on the shares. The court below has held that he is a member of the company and therefore must pay the balance due from him. Hence the appeal. A preliminary objection is taken that the notice required by section 169 of the Companies Act, has not been given within the time prescribed by law, and the time has not been extended. On it being pointed out that the learned Judge of this Court before whom the appeal was presented extended the time for service of notice, it was urged that it was an ex parte order and the present case was not a fit one for the granting of such an extension. An affidavit was filed by the appellant to the effect that he had been misled by the legal advice given to him and hence the delay in [540] making the appeal and application. We do not deem it necessary to go in detail into this question. The circumstances are peculiar, and in our opinion in such circumstances extension of time ought to be granted and has properly been granted.

In regard to the merits of the case the decision depends upon the question as to whether the condition on which the present appellant applied for shares was a condition precedent to his becoming a share-holder in the company. We have little hesitation, looking to the facts of the case and the subsequent conduct of the company itself, that it was clearly understood by the present appellant and the company that it was a condition precedent that a branch mill should be started at Fyzabad or its suburbs. If it had been otherwise, there would have been no necessity for the company to pass the resolution of the 27th of September, 1909. It appears that the company wished to raise funds locally and the persons living in Fyzabad were willing to subscribe provided that a mill was started there. The learned advocate for the respondents admits that if the condition is a condition precedent, as stated above, the appellant is entitled to succeed. In view of the facts stated above we have no hesitation in saying that the condition was a condition precedent. The appellant is not a member of the company, but apparently is a creditor and entitled to get back what he has already paid. We allow the appeal and set aside the order of the court below. His name will be removed from the list of contributories. The appellant will get his costs in both courts.

Appeal allowed.

Act (Local) No. III of 1901 (United Provinces Land Revenue Act), section 111—Plaintiff referred to Civil Court—Suit filed within time but subsequently withdrawn—Second suit filed after prescribed period.

Where a Revenue Court, acting under section 111 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, required a party to the case before it to institute a suit in the Civil Court within three months, and the plaintiff did so, but for some technical reason had to withdraw it with permission to bring a fresh suit, which was in fact filed without delay, but after the three months had expired: held that the second suit must be considered to be a continuation of the first suit, and it could not, therefore, be held that the plaintiff had not complied with the order of the Revenue Court.

[Fol: 25 I. C. 188=12 A. L. J. 989; Dist; 23 A. L J. 529;]

THE facts of this case, so far as they are material for the purposes of this report, were as follows :—

The plaintiff brought a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration of his title to certain immovable property in pursuance of an order of a Revenue Court under section 111 of Act No. III of 1901. The suit was instituted within the three months allowed, but was withdrawn on account of a technical defect, with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The present suit, which has given rise to this appeal, was accordingly filed, but beyond the three months allowed by the Revenue Court. The court below decreed the suit in part. Both parties appealed, the plaintiff contending that the whole suit should have been decreed, and the defendant that the entire suit should have been dismissed.

Munshi Gulzari Lal, for defendant respondent, contended that the suit, not having been filed within three months, was barred by time. He relied on Banwari Lal v. Gopi (1). The mere facts that originally the suit was instituted within three months did not help the plaintiff, inasmuch as the present suit was not filed within three months. The permission granted by the court to file a fresh suit was subject to the time limitation for the filing of the suit.

Babu Piari Lal Banerji (for Babu Durga Charan Banerji), for the plaintiff appellant, urged that the present suit should be [542] deemed to be a suit in continuation of the first suit, which was filed within three months, and the present suit was filed on the very next day after the first suit was withdrawn.

Munshi Gulzari Lal was heard in reply on other points arising in the cross appeal filed by the defendants appellants.

RICHARDS, C. J. and BANERJI, J.—This and the connected appeal No. 765 of 1912 arise out of the same suit. The suit was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration of his title in respect of a three anna two pie odd share in mauza Manjaba Hardaspur. It appears that on the 10th of June, 1901, Bhagwan Das, the respondent in this appeal and the appellant in the connected appeal, and five other persons, who were defendants to the suit, sold a six anna eight pie share in the village in question to the predecessor in title of the plaintiff. At that time, however, mutation could only be obtained in respect of a three anna five pie odd share. In the year 1908, Bhagwan Das applied for partition, alleging himself to be entitled to certain shares in the village. The plaintiff contested the share claimed by Bhagwan Das. Thereupon the Revenue Court directed the plaintiff in the present suit to institute proceedings in the Civil Court, within three months, to establish his title. A suit was instituted within the prescribed period, but for some technical reason the suit had to be withdrawn with leave to bring a fresh suit. The court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim to the extent of a two anna six pie odd share against Bhagwan Das and his co-defendant of the first party. The defendant, Bhagwan Das, appealed to the lower appeliate court. The lower appellate court has given a judgement which we feel great difficulty in understanding. In the first place, the learned Judge seems to think that he was entitled to apportion the liability of Bhagwan Das and his co-vendors. We think that this was quite incorrect. All the vendors were jointly liable to make good the property which they purported to sell out of any property which they had at the time of the sale or which they subsequently acquired. If we were to accept the finding of the learned Additional Judge that Bhagwan Das acquired an eight pie share after the date of the purchase, it might possibly be a reason for giving the plaintiff a decree to the full extent claimed. However, the plaintiff did not [543] appeal to the court below and does not appeal to this Court on this point.

A technical objection has been raised by Bhagwan Das in this appeal. He contends that, although a suit was instituted within the three months prescribed by the order of the Revenue Court under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act, that suit was withdrawn and the present suit was not instituted within the three months prescribed. We think that there is no force in this objection. In the first place, according to the record as it stood while the case was in the court below, it did not appear that the proceedings in the Revenue Court were in existence. As a matter of fact, at one time at least they had been struck off. It is alleged that these proceedings have been restored. Assuming this to be so, the present suit was practically a continuance of the suit which was instituted within time. In any event, the plaintiff did comply with the order of the court and the terms of the section, because he did institute a suit within the three months. We think this technical ground fails. We allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the court below and restore the decree of the court of first instance with costs.

SUNDAR LAL AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. BRIJ LAL (Plaintiff) AND BHAIRON PRASAD, AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

Joint Hindu family—Mortgage—Mortgage by two brothers of undivided shares, each assenting to the other's mortgage—Partition—Entire mortgaged property falling to the share of one brother—Effect of partition on rights of mortgagee.

Two brothers constituting a joint Hindu family jointly mortgaged in 1879 a ten biswa share in village Chauwar. In 1881, in substitution for this mortgage, each brother mortgaged to the same mortgagee a five biswa undivided share in Chauwar, and each brother also signed the mortgage executed by the other. In 1888 the family property was partitioned and the whole ten biswas of Chauwar fell to the share of one brother.

Held on suit by the son of the mortgagee for sale that the plaintiff was entitled to bring to sale a five biswa share in Chauwar under the mortgage executed by the brother who had lost possession of the village and not merely [544] to have recourse against such portion of the family property as he had taken in exchange therefor. Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdry (1) distinguished.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

Bhagirath and Baldeo, two brothers, formed a joint Hindu family, and owned, amongst other zamindari property, a ten biswa share in mauza Chauwar. They jointly executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff's father, on the 8th of November, 1879, of this ten biswa share in Chauwar. On the 16th of November, 1881, the two brothers executed two separate mortgages, in favour of the same mortgagee, in each of which each brother hypothecated a five biswa share in Chauwar for half the amount then due under the original mortgage deed of 1879. These two mortgage bonds were signed by both brothers. On the 16th of October, 1888, the joint family property was partitioned privately and the whole ten biswa share in Chauwar was allotted to Baldeo's share, and it became his separate property. Baldeo's mortgage was subsequently discharged, under circumstances related later on. The plaintiff, who was the son of the original mortgagee, sued to recover Rs. 4,326-4-0 on foot of the mortgage executed by Bhagirath on the 16th of November, 1881, and prayed that, in default of payment, the mortgaged property, namely, a five biswa share of Chauwar, be put up for sale, or if the court considered that on account of the partition of the 16th of October, 1888, the plaintiff was not entitled to have the mortgaged property in Chauwar sold, then the other property allotted to Bhagirath in lieu of his share in Chauwar might be sold by auction. The representatives of the original mortgagors, who, however, had no longer any interest in the property, and their various transferees were made defendants. Both the lower courts decreed the suit, and directed that in default of payment of the mortgage money, a five biswa share in Chauwar be sold. The present appeal was preferred by some of the defendants to the suit, who were in possession of the property both as purchasers of a portion thereof and as mortgagees under a possessory mortgage of the whole ten biswas executed by Baldeo after the partition of the family property.

[545] Mr. B. E. O'Conor, The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji, for the respondents.

RYVES, J.—This appeal arises out of the following facts:—Bhagirath and Baldeo, two brothers, formed a joint Hindu family, and owned, amongst other zamindari property, a ten biswa share in mauza Chauwar. They jointly executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff's father, on the 8th of November, 1879, of this ten biswa share in Chauwar.

On the 16th of November, 1881, the two brothers executed two separate mortgages, in favour of the same mortgagee, in each of which each brother hypothecated a five biswa share in Chauwar for half the amount then due under the original mortgage deed of 1879. These two mortgage bonds were signed by both brothers.

On the 16 of October, 1888, the joint family property was partitioned privately and the whole ten biswa share in Chauwar was allotted to Baldeo's share and it became his separate property. Baldeo's mortgage was subsquently discharged, under circumstances related later on.

The plaintiffs, who is the son of the original mortgagee, has now sued to recover Rs. 4,326-4-0 on foot of the mortgage executed by Bhagirath on the 16th of November, 1881, and prayed that, in default of payment, the mortgaged property, namely, a five biswa share of Chauwar be put for sale, or if the court considered that on account of the partition of the 16th of October, 1888, the plaintiff was not entitled to have the mortgaged property in Chauwar sold, then the other property allotted to Bhagirath in lieu of his share in Chauwar might be sold by auction. The representatives of the original mortgagors, who, however, have no longer any interest in the property, and their various transferees were made defendants.

Both the lower courts decreed the suit, and directed that in default of payment of the mortgage money, a five biswa share in Chauwar be sold. The present appellants are in possession of this property. They acquired their title under the following circumstances:—

On the 11th November, 1892, they took a prossessory mortgage from Baldeo of his ten biswa share in Chauwar of which he [546] was then the sole owner. I may observe that the mortgage deed, which is on the record, shows that although Baldeo's own mortgage was mentioned, and a sum of money with which it was discharged, was left in the hands of the mortgagee, it was not stated in the deed that there were no other incumbrances on the property. On the contrary there was a covenant in the deed, that if any other incumbrances should be found to exist, then Baldeo would be responsible for their discharge.

Later on a four biswa share of this property was put up for sale in execution of a decree held by one Lalta Prasad, and was purchased by Dhanpat Rai and another person, who in turn, on the 6th of September, 1893, sold it to the present appellants.

The appellants' main contention throughout has been that, the mortgaged property having gone on partition to Baldeo's share, the property which had been received by Bhagirath in exchange for his five biswas in Chauwar should be made liable for this mortgage.

Great stress has been laid in argument on the case of Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdry (1). It seems to me that the exceptional rule applied in that case is only applicable in similar circumstances.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

38 A. 543=21 I. C. 734=11 A. L. J. 916.

In that case one of several joint owners mortgaged for his own personal benefit, without the knowledge or consent of his co-sharers, his undivided rights in certain properties, alleging that they were his own, when as a matter of fact they were portions of a joint estate. A partition had already been commenced, and on its completion, the estate was split up and the mortgagor received in his separate share some only of the properties mortgaged and other property which had not been included in the deed. The mortgage was by way of conditional sale, and the mortgagee sued to get possession of the property which was allotted to the mortgagor on partition, and it was held that he could do so.

The Lordships say :—" It is clear that the mortgagor had power to pledge his own undivided share in these villages, but it is also clear that he could not, by so doing, affect the interest of the other sharers in them, and that persons who took the security, took it subject to the right of those sharers to enforce a [347] partition and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty."

Their Lordships go on to say :—" In the present case there is not a suggestion of fraud, nor is there any ground to suppose that the partition was other than fair and equal. The mortgagee is content to accept what has been allotted in substitution of the undivided interest (of the mortgagor) as the fair equivalent of it. Their Lordships are of opinion, not only that he has a right to do so, but that this, in the circumstances of the case, was his sole right, and that he could not successfully have sought to charge any other parcel of the estate in the hands of any of the former co-sharers."

That rule is, I think, applicable mainly to protect co-sharers from being saddled with the liability of a mortgage created by another co-sharer, without their knowledge and for which they have received no benefit, on an undivided portion of the joint estate, which on partition falls to their separate possession. And in such a case the mortgagee " who has no privity with the other co-sharers, would have no recourse against the lands allotted to such co-sharers ; but must pursue his remedy against the lands allotted to the mortgagor . . . He would take the subject of the pledge in the new form which it had assumed."

Now what are the facts in this case ?

The mortgage was dealing with all the co-sharers. The two mortgages of 1881, one of which is now in suit, were made with the knowledge and consent of both co-sharers, and were in substitution of the prior joint mortgage of 1879.

Could Baldeo himself, after partition, have claimed the benefit of the rule in Byjnath's case ? I think not. He knew that his brother was mortgaging his undivided five biswa share in Chauwar, and when, at the time of the partition, he accepted ten biswas in Chauwar in exchange for something else, he knew perfectly well how it was incumbered.

If he could not, I do not think his representatives in interest can. In paragraph 7 of their written statement, the appellants do not state that when they took the ten biswas in Chauwar in mortgage from Baldeo, they believed there were no other mortgages on it other than Baldeo's, which was discharged. Similarly, [348] when they bought the four biswa share in 1893, they do not even allege that they believed it was unincumbered. If they had taken the trouble to examine the registration records, which, as prudent men they should have done, they would have discovered that the mortgage of Bhagirath executed in 1881 was still outstanding. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

PIGGOTT J.—I concur generally. The rule laid down in Byjnath's case obviously can have no application to transactions entered into with the general body of co-parceners. In the present case I look on the transaction of the 16th of November, 1881, as little more than a novation of the older contract of 1879, and seeing that each of the brothers signed the other's mortgage deed as a witness, it is obvious that the mortgagee was dealing with the two of them and had the consent of both to the transaction then entered into. under the circumstances, the rights of the mortgagee and the liability of the mortgaged property could not, in my opinion, be affected by the subsequent partition.

BY THE COURT:—The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Held that the widow of a member of a joint Hindu family who is in possession of a portion of the family property under a family arrangement, in lieu of maintenance merely, is not a co-sharer and cannot in virtue of such possession enforce a claim for partition of the share of which she is so in possession, even though her name may be recorded, solatii causa as a co-sharer. Bhoop Singh v. Phool Kower (1) and Jhumna Kuar v. Chain Sukh (2) referred to.

[Ref. 68 I. C. 187; 68 I. C. 989=20 A. L. J. 780.]

THE facts of this case are fully set forth in the judgment. Briefly stated, they were these:—The appellant was a Hindu widow in a joint family and had a right to maintenance. Under [549] a compromise effected with the members of the family, she was put in possession, for life, of a certain share of the property, the profits which were to be taken by her in lieu of maintenance. Her name was recorded in the revenue papers in respect of that share. She applied for partition of the share. Her claim was allowed by the Assistant Collector, but, on appeal, was disallowed by the District Judge. Hence this appeal.

Munshi Parmeshwar Dayal, for the appellant:—

A Hindu widow who is in possession of specific property for her life in lieu of maintenance, whose name is recorded as that of a co-sharer and who is in sole enjoyment of the profits, realizing them by bringing suits and obtaining decrees when necessary, is a person who comes within the term "recorded co-sharer" as used in section 107 of the Land Revenue Act, and is entitled to obtain partition under that Act. A partition under the Hindu Law is very different from a partition under the Land Revenue Act. Under the former, no doubt, she must fully prove her title, but under the latter it is enough if she is a "recorded co sharer." The term used in section 107 of the Land Revenue Act is "co-sharer" and not "proprietor;" and the inference is that it was intended to give a right of partition to persons in possession who exercised some rights of ownership and who were co-sharers in the liability to pay the revenue assessed on the mahal, although their status might fall short of absolute proprietorship. By a family arrangement the appellant was put in possession of the share in lieu of maintenance ; she cannot be ousted during her life ; her maintenance forms a charge upon that share, and the case comes within the ruling in Habib-ullah v. Musammat Kushimba (1).

[Munshi Iswar Saran, for the respondent, mentioned the cases of Bhoop Singh v. Phool Kower (2) and Jhunna Kuar v. Chain Sukh (3).]

The first of these cases was decided under Act XIX of 1863, in which the words used were "recorded proprietor." Secondly, the respondent's objection was time-barred, as it was filed after the date fixed by the proclamation. No fresh proclamation was [550] issued after the appellant's application was filed ; all objections had to be filed within the date fixed by the first and only proclamation.

Munshi Iswar Saran (for the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru with him Mr. S. N. Mushran) for the respondent, was not called upon.

RICHARDS, C. J., and BANERJI, J.—An application for partition was made to the Revenue Court by Lalta Prasad and others. A proclamation was issued as required by section 110 of the Land Revenue Act, and on the date fixed in the proclamation the appellant, Musammat Kailashi Kunwar, made an application praying that a four annas share, of which she was in possession and in respect of which her name was recorded, should be formed into a separate mahal. This application was opposed by the respondent, Badri Prasad, who contended that Musammat Kailashi Kunwar was not a co-sharer entitled to partition, but was merely in possession in lieu of maintenance. The court of first instance (the Assistant Collector) determined the question of Kailashi Kunwar's right to obtain partition and decided in her favour. On appeal from its decision, the learned District Judge found that Kailashi Kunwar's possession was not as a co-sharer, that is, as a Hindu widow who had succeeded to the separate estate of her husband, but that under a compromise she had been put in possession in lieu of her maintenance by her husband's brother, and in view of this finding the learned Judge held that Kailashi Kunwar was not entitled to claim partition.

In our opinion this view of the learned Judge is correct. Kailashi Kunwar, although recorded as a co-sharer, could not claim partition unless it could be proved that she was in fact a co-sharer. This is manifest, as the learned Judge points out, from the provisions of section 111 and 112 of the Act. As we have stated above the learned Judge has found that Kailashi Kunwar was in possession, not as a co-sharer but in lieu of her maintenance. This being so, she was not a co-sharer and was not therefore entitled to claim partition. This was held in Bhoop Singh v. Phool Kower (2) and the same view was affirmed in Jhunna Kuar v. Chain Singh (3).

[551] It is next contended that the respondent's objection was time-barred. This contention is also incorrect. The application of Kailashi Kunwar was under clause (2) of section 110, and, as it was filed on the date fixed in the proclamation and not before the date fixed, it must be deemed to be a first application for partition, and as apparently no fresh proclamation was issued the respondent could come in with his objections and the court was entitled to adjudicate upon it. On this point we may refer to the case of Khasay v. Jugla (1).

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

[28th July, 1913.]

Hindu law—Hindu widow—Investments by widow from income of husband's estate—Whether or not such investments become accretions to the husband's estate.

Where immovable property is purchased by a Hindu widow in possession as such of the estate of her late husband out of the income of that estate, such property does not necessarily become an accretion to the husband's estate. The widow has full power to dispose of it during her life-time, and it is only when she manifests during her life-time a clear intention to treat it as an accretion to her husband's estate, or allows it at her death to remain undisposed of, that such property will become part of that estate.

[Ref : 53 I. C. 905=37 M. L. J. 627; 64 I. C. 531.]

THE facts of this case were, briefly, as follows :—

One Than Chand died leaving two widows, who succeeded to his estate. The survivor of them, Musammat Lachman Kunwar, acquired by purchase in 1874, many years after Than Chand's death, the property in dispute in this appeal, consisting of a share in a village in which Than Chand had never owned any share. Thereafter the property was mortgaged by her; and in 1888 she made a gift of it to her brother, Chhidammi Lal. The property passed from Chhidammi Lal's heirs to the appellants through a series of transactions. Musammat Lachman Kunwar died in [552] 1905. The reversioners brought a suit for recovery of the property, alleging that it had been acquired out of the savings of the income of Than Chand's estate and that it formed part of the corpus of that estate. The Subordinate Judge decreed the claim. The defendants appealed.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji (with him Mr. Ibn Ahmad), for the appellant :—

The lower court is wrong in presuming that the property was acquired out of the income of the husband's estate and that it formed part of that estate. There is no presumption of law that property acquired by a Hindu widow forms part of her husband's estate. The question from what source the purchase money came is one of fact; and it was for the plaintiffs to start their case with evidence sufficient to shift the onus of proof; Dakhina Kali Debi v. Jagadishwar Bhuttacharjee (1); Diwan Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh v Indarpal Singh (2). The plaintiffs advanced no evidence to prove that the purchase money came out of the savings of the income of Than Chand's estate. On the other hand, the appellant gave evidence to show that the money was advanced by Chhidammi Lal. Secondly, assuming that the property was purchased with the savings of the income, it is abundantly clear that the widow never intended that this property should form part of her husband's estate. She appropriated the property to herself, dealt with it by mortgaging it, and finally disposed of it by gift. Under such circumstances the property must be deemed to be her stridhan, and she was fully competent to dispose of it; Trevelyan: Hindu Law, page 458. The question is one of intention to be judged by the widow's conduct and mode of dealing with the property; Bhagabati Koer v. Sahodra Koer (3).

Pandit Ramakant Malaviya, (for The Hon'ble Munshi Gokul Prasad; with him Babu Girdhari Lal Agarwala), for the respondent:—

The leading case on the subject is that of Isri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (4). The circumstances of the present case are very similar to those of that case. Here, too, the widow has made a gift and other transfers to her relatives, not only of the property [553] in dispute, but also of other property which formed part of her husband's estate. She was attempting to change the succession, irrespective of whether the property was acquired by her or formed part of the original estate, and to give them inheritance to her own relatives. She was dealing alike with the property in dispute and property forming part of the original estate. Under such circumstances little value is to be attached to the fact of her alienation of the property in dispute as furnishing evidence of her intention to keep this property separate and apart from the corpus of her husband's estate. So, in the absence of satisfactory proof of such intention, the general rule must hold, namely, that property acquired with the accumulations of the income of her husband's estate would not constitute her stridhan but would form part of the corpus of that estate; Guru Das Banerji: Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan, second edition, page 309; Mayne: Hindu Law, seventh edition, page 846.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji was not heard in reply.

RICHARDS, C. J., and TUDBALL, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of immovable property. In the present appeal we are only concerned with a five biswa share in mauza Keiwali Abdullahganj. The claim is made by reversioners, who claimed that the shares in this village formed portion of the estate of Than Chand. Than Chand died very many years ago, leaving him surviving two widows, Musammat Dhan Kunwar and Musammat Lachman Kunwar. Musammat Lachman Kunwar survived Musammat Dhan Kunwar. Musammat Lachman Kunwar died on the 18th of March, 1905, and the present suit was instituted on the 6th of August, 1908.

The title to the property now in dispute is shortly as follows:—It originally belonged to a man called Dulli; and here we may mention that it is not contended that Than Chand ever owned this property or indeed any share in this village. One Sheikh Muhammad Sharf-ud-din had a decree against Dulli, and the property was put up for sale in execution of this decree. It was purchased by one Baldeo, otherwise Badlu, a Brahman. He was not the actual purchaser, but he acquired the rights of the purchaser through pre-emption. Baldeo, otherwise Badlu, having thus become possessed of the property, sold it to Musammat Lachman Kunwar in the [554] year 1874, many years after her husband's death. Musammat Lachman Kunwar mortgaged the property; the exact date is not shown. She then on the 27th of November 1888, made a deed of gift in favour of Chhidammi Lal, her brother, who entered into possession. After the death of Chhidammi Lal, his sons, Sham Lal, Hoti Ram and others, sold three biswas out of the five biswas to the appellant. A suit was then brought upon foot of the mortgage which Musammat Lachman Kunwar had made, but the appellant redeemed the mortgage before allowing the property to be put up to sale. He then brought a suit claiming to have the remaining portion of the property sold, basing his claim on the fact that he had redeemed the property and paid the whole of the mortgage debt. The remaining portion of the property was sold and purchased by the appellant. The title of the appellant to the property is thus abundantly clear, unless it can be shown that the purchase by Musammat Lachman Kunwar in 1874 was a purchase made for he benefit of her husband's estate, and that she intended that the property should form portion of his estate. Some evidence was given on behalf of the appellant toshow that the purchase money which Musammat Lachman Kunwar gave for the property was actually lent to her by Chhidammi. No evidence was given by the other side to show where the money came from. The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved the evidence that Chhidammi Lal had advanced the purchase money, and he says at page 17 of the judgment:—"Musammat Lachman was then in possession of her husband's property and therefore the presumption is that she acquired this property with the income arising out of her husband's estate. It is laid down in Siromoni's Hindu Law, page 372, 2nd edition:—'Where a widow is in possession of her husband's estate the burden of proving any property to be her own separate property rests on the party calling it as such.' According to that principle it was for the defendants to prove that the share in question was Lachman's separate property and her stridhan, but I think that he has failed to do so. I do not believe Dulli and Bhupal's statements that Lachman took the money for this purchase from Chhidammi. I find that Lachman purchased this property out of the income of her husband's property and that she had only a life interest in it and that she had no right [555] whatever to alienate it. The alienations made by her and her transferee's heirs are not binding on the plaintiffs." Even if we assume that the property was purchased out of the savings of the income of Than Chand's estate, the widow was entitled to deal with those savings as she thought fit. Now if it could be shown that at the time of the purchase it was her intention that the property should become an accretion to her husband's estate, she might not afterwards perhaps have been able to take it away from the husband's estate and change the devolution of the title thereto. In the present case, however, we find that not very long after the acquisition of the property she mortgaged it, thus dealing with it as her own property. We have already mentioned that her husband had never owned the property or any shares in this village. Subsequently, in the year 1888, she made a deed of gift. We do not think, under these circumstances, that we ought to hold that it was the intention of Mussammat Lachman Kunwar to buy this property as an accretion to her husband's estate. It seems to us that the matter is well put in Mr. Trevelyan's work on Hindu Law at page 458 : —"Should she invest the income in such a way as to indicate her intention that it was not to form part of her husband's estate, but to remain at her disposal, whether such investment be of a temporary or permanent nature, she can deal with it, at any rate, during her life-time. Should she not dispose of property during her life-time, it does not pass to her heir, but is treated as a portion of her husband's estate." Under these circumstances, we think that the appeal ought to be allowed.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the court below and as against the present appellant, dismiss the plaintiff's claim with costs in all courts.

Appeal allowed.

[29th July, 1913].

Civil Procedure Code (1908,) order V, rule 15—Summons—Question of sufficiency of service of summons.

The summons in a suit was served on the paternal uncle of the defendant, who was a member of the same joint family and lived in the same house with the defendant.

Held that such service was insufficient in the absence of evidence that the defendant himself could not be found.

[Dist : 65 I. C. 44.]

THE facts of the case were as follows :—

A suit was instituted against Kalka and his nephew, Makhan. The summons was served on Kalka personally. The summons issued to Makhan was also handed over to Kalka, who wrote on the back of the summons, "Signature of Makhan by the pen of Kalka." Neither of the defendants appeared to defend the suit, and it was decreed ex parte. Thereafter Makhan applied to have the ex parte decree set aside. He stated that the the summons had not been served on him; that he had no knowledge of the suit and that his uncle Kalka was a man not in his senses. It appeared that Kalka and Makhan were members of a joint Hindu family. It did not appear that Kalka had ever been authorized by Makhan to accept service of summons for him. It was neither proved nor alleged that at the time when the summons was handed over to Kalka Makhan could not be found, or that any attempt was made to find him and serve the summons on him personally. The lower court, in disposing of Makhan's application, held that he had failed to prove that Kalka was not in his senses, or that he had not been informed of the institution of the suit, and dismissed his application. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

more. Admittedly, the summons was not served on him personally; the question is whether under the circumstances of the case the service was proper and sufficient. It is submitted that it was not, for the conditions laid down for service in the mode [557] prescribed by order V, rule 15, were not proved to have existed. Substituted service had not been ordered or applied for.

Pandit Vishnu Ram Mehta (with him The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal), for the respondents:—

Makhan and Kalka were members of the same family and lived jointly. The presumption arises that Makhan must have had actual notice of the institution of the suit from his uncle who accepted service of the summons of Makhan. Under the circumstances it was for Makhan to show that he had, as a matter of fact, no knowledge of the suit. Service on the head of a joint family is prima facie sufficient.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq Khan was not heard in reply.

RICHARDS, C. J., and PIGGOTT, J.—This appeal arises out of an order of the court below refusing to set aside an ex parte decree. The applicant in the court below swore that he had never been served with the summons. There was no affidavit contradicting this statement. The learned Judge says "the summons was delivered to the own paternal uncle of the applicant. Now the applicant pleads that the paternal uncle is not in his senses, but he gives no proof of it, nor does he give any proof to show that he was not informed of the institution of the suit." The service of the summons in suits is a very important part of the procedure. The Code itself provides that as far as possible service must be personal. Order V, rule 15, provides that "where in any suit the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him." If it had been shown to the complete satisfaction of the court that the present appellant could not be found and that service for that reason had been made upon his paternal uncle, who lived with him, the court would have been entitled to have held the service sufficient. But there appears no evidence whatever that there was any difficulty in finding the appellant. It appears to have been considered that it was quite sufficient to hand the summons to his paternal uncle. This view of the law is not correct. We must allow the appeal, set aside the order of the court below, grant the application to set aside the decree and [558] remand the case with directions to readmit the case upon its file of pending cases and proceed to dispose of it according to law.

Appeal decreed and cause remanded.

Act No. I of 1872 (Indian Evidence Act), section 92, proviso 1—Evidence—Proof of failure of consideration—Promissory note given partly on account of a gambling debt.

The defendant, who had been gambling with the plaintiffs and had lost, gave the plaintiffs two promissory notes partly for his gambling losses and partly on other accounts, but it could not be ascertained what proportion of the total sum secured was represented by the gambling debts.

Held, on suit to recover on these notes, that it was open to the defendants to prove that the consideration was in part at least money lost in gambling; and that the court below was justified, on its finding that the part of the consideration represented by gambling debts could not be separated from the rest, in dismissing the whole suit. Juggernauth Sew Bux v. Ram Dayal (1) distinguished.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The defendant had been gambling with the plaintiffs at their house during the Dewali and had lost. Partly on account of these losses the defendant executed two promissory notes in the plaintiffs' favour. When, however, the plaintiffs sued on these notes the defendant pleaded want of consideration, also that the consideration was void, because it represented gambling losses. The court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' claim; but on appeal the lower appellate court, after referring an issue, dismissed the suit in toto. The plaintiffs thereupon appealed to the High Court.

RICHARDS, C J. and PIGGOTT, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit on foot of two promissory notes. The defendant pleaded want of consideration, and also that the consideration was void because it represented gambling losses. The court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' suit. The lower appellate court, after referring an [559] issue, dismissed the plaintiffs' claim. We think that we must accept the facts of the case as found by the court below which are as follows:—

The plaintiffs, the defendant and others were gambling at the house of the plaintiffs, during the Dewali. The defendant incurred losses, partly to the plaintiffs and partly to other persons. It is impossible to say exactly how much his losses were, and how much of those losses were losses to the plaintiffs, but there can be no doubt that the finding of the court is to the effect that the consideration for the promissory notes was at least in part losses to the plaintiffs in respect of gambling debts. The court below was unable to ascertain (chiefly because the plaintiff would not come forward with a true and accurate statement) how much of the alleged consideration represented money which had been borrowed from the plaintiffs by the defendant. suit, and we think under the circumstances he was quite justisfied in so doing.

Illegal consideration is no consideration, and in the present case, even if part of the consideration was losses to third parties, the consideration was not severable. The learned advocate on behalf of the appellants quotes the decision in Juggernath Sew Bux v. Ram Dyal (1) and contends that it was not open to the defendant to show that the consideration for the promissory notes was money lost in gambling. In that case it was sought by oral evidence to show that a certain contract was of an entirely different nature from what it appeared to be on the face of it. Section 92 of the Evidence Act, after providing for the exclusion of oral evidence in respect of certain contracts, provides that "any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document, or which would entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto, such as fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution, want of capacity in any contracting party, want or failure of consideration, or mistake in fact or law." In our opinion, where it can be shown that the consideration was losses in gaming, this is "want or failure of consideration" within the meaning of proviso (1) to section 92 of the Evidence Act. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THIS was an appeal from jail by three persons out of four who had been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Mirzapur of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to seven years rigorous imprisonment. On this appeal coming up for hearing before a single Judge, notice had been served on all four men to show cause why they should not be convicted of murder under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced accordingly.

The facts of the case are fully set forth in the judgment of the Court.

35 A. 560=21 I C. 1005=11 A L. J. 926 =14 Cr. L. J. 685.

BANERJI and RYVES, JJ.—In this case four persons, Hanuman, Tippal, Sheoraj and Shankar, were convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Mirzapur, under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to transportation for seven years on two counts; the sentences were to run concurrently. All of them, except Shankar, appealed from their convictions and sentences to this Court. The learned Judge before whom the appeal came for hearing directed that notice should issue to all four of them to show cause why their conviction should not be altered to one under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, and why they should not be sentenced to [561] death or to transportation for life. Notice has been served on all four. The facts of the case are very simple. Tippal and Sheoraj are the sons of Bori, who has absconded, and Shankar and Hanuman are their first cousins. Early in August, 1912, there was a dispute between Bori on the one hand and Sheoratan and Madhwa, the deceased, on the other, about some mangoes, and, as was natural, a good deal of abuse was exchanged. On the evening of the 17th of August last, Sheoratan was returning to his home shortly before sunset. As he passed Bori's house, Sheoraj caught hold of him round the waist. Sheoratan struggled to get free and abused Sheoraj. Thereupon Bori called out to the four accused to beat Sheoratan. Bori, Tippal, Hanuman and Shankar came out of the inclosure in which all five lived, with lathis, and all of them beat Sheoratan who was unarmed. They felled him to the ground and went on beating him as he lay there. Madhwa, cousin of Sheoratan, came running up with a lathi to help him. He struck Shankar a blow on the head, but was knocked down and beaten by all five. Gauri, the father of Sheoratan, then came up and was also knocked down and beaten and left unconscious. Musammat Maiki, the wife of Madhwa, threw herself on her husband's body and was also beaten, although not severely. Sheoratan, and Madhwa died on the spot. The assailants then ran away. This version of the story is that generally given by the prosecution witnesses, and particularly by Puni, who is the brother of Bori, and, therefore, the uncle of all the four appellants. Nothing has been shown, in his cross-examination or otherwise, to indicate any bias or hostility against any one of the accused, and we agree with the assessors and the learned Judge in accepting his evidence as substantially true. It amounts to this. Five men armed with lathis assaulted Sheoratan, a young man of some thirty-three years of age, who was unarmed, and beat him with their lathis. They knocked him down and continued beating him, with the result that he died then and there. The medical evidence shows that his breast-bone was fractured and that injury was also caused to the pericardium, the result of lathi blows. The body was so decomposed when the post mortem examination was made that external marks of bruises could not be detected. While the accused were thus assaulting Sheoratan, Madhwa came up to the rescue of [562] his cousin. He also was beaten to the ground and so severely belaboured that he died. The medical evidence shows that his skull was fractured, and so was his breast-bone, and that death was due to the fracture of the skull. It is thus clear that all the accused brought about the death of Sheoratan and Madhwa. The learned Sessions Judge on these facts has convicted them under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code. He says:—"Though the four accused can be imputed with knowledge of the likelihood that death might be caused, yet I think no intent can be presumed. Another reason why I think the charge of murder cannot be sustained is that it is not proved which of the five men, Shankar, Hanuman, Tippal, Sheoraj and Bori dealt the fatal blows that resulted in actual death."

We are unable to agree with either proposition of law. Under section 299 of the Indian Penal Code, a person is guilty of culpable homicide who causes death by doing an act with the intention of causing death or with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that he is likely by such act to cause death. Under section 300, except in the cases hereinafter excepted, culpable homicide is murder if the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing death, or (4thly), if the person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, and commits such act without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or such injury as aforesaid.

It seems to us that the case falls clearly within the 4th clause of section 300 of the Indian Penal Code. It cannot be said that any of the exceptions takes the case out of the section. The only exception which could possibly be suggested is exception No. 4, but here, even if there was no premeditation, which may be granted, there was no sudden fight, as Sheoratan was unarmed and taken by surprise. But even if we take it that in the case of Madhwa there was a sudden fight, the accused cannot take the benefit of the exception, because they took an undue advantage of their victim and acted in a cruel manner. Sheortan was unarmed, Madhwa, although armed, was one against five Both were instantly felled to the ground, and in this defenceless condition were beaten with [563] such violence that they died on the spot. It is impossible to prove by direct evidence the intention of a particular individual. The intention can only be inferred from the reasonable and probable result of his act or conduct. The learned Judge seems to confuse the meaning of the term intention with desire. It is quite possible that these persons had no wish either collectively or individually to kill Sheoratan (as is indicated by the fact that no wound was discovered on his head), but nevertheless, if they beat him in the way it is proved that they did, they must be taken to have had knowledge that their act must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, and if so, they are guilty of murder. Under circumstances such as these, it is quite immaterial to ascertain whose blow was the immediately fatal one. In the case of Sheoratan no single blow need necessarily have been the actual cause of death, which may have been due to the shock resulting from the many severe blows he received. They were all taking part in the beating, and all must be presumed to have known that the probable result of such a beating was that at least, such bodily injury would be caused as was likely to cause death. It did in fact cause the death of two persons in the prime of life. We cannot agree with the rule of law laid down in Dhian Singh v. King-Emperor (1). We, therefore, convict the four accused under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. We set aside their conviction under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code and we sentence them under both charges with respect to the death of Sheoratan and Madhwa to transportation for life (to run concurrently) with effect from the 24th of May, 1913.

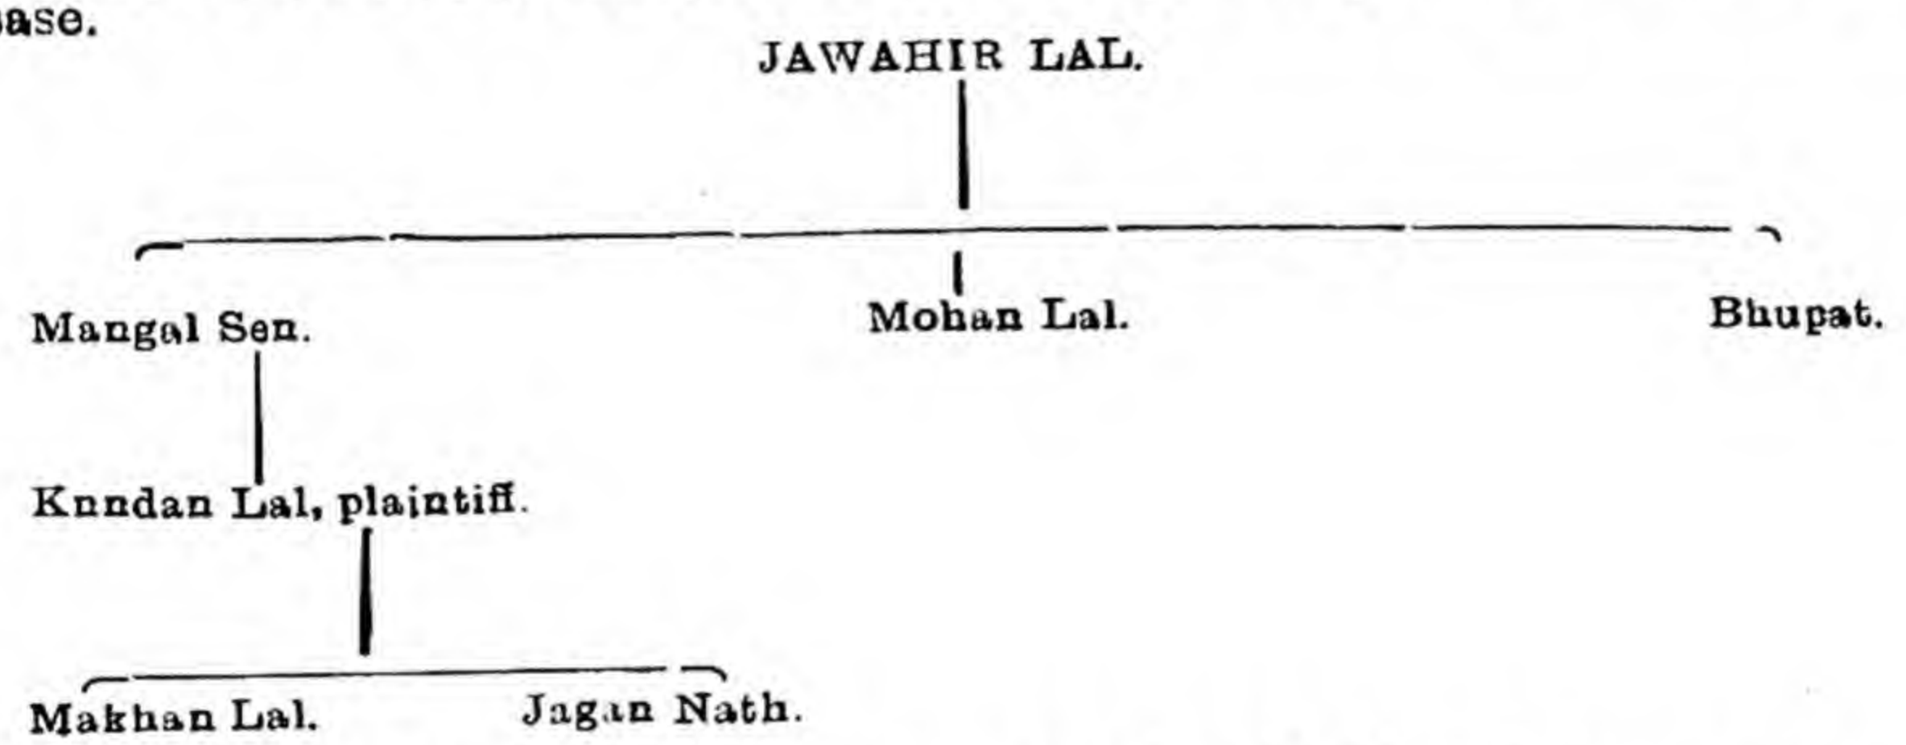
[6th August, 1913]



Hindu law—Joint Hindu family—Presumptions as to property in the possession of members of a joint family.

Property in the possession of a joint Hindu family should be presumed to be joint family property until the contrary is shown, even though it may have been acquired in the name of a particular member of the family.

The fact that property stands in the individual name of one or other member of a joint Hindu family does not of itself give rise to the presumption that it is the separate property of that member, Gurumurthi Reddi v. Gurammal (1), Shiu Golam Sing v. Baran Sing (2) and Taruck Chunder Totudar v. Joodheshteer Chunder Kundoo (3) referred to. Ram Kishan Das v. Tunda Mal (4) discussed.

[Ref. 71 I. C. 130=16 L. W. 936=1923 M. W. N. 57.]

One Shankar Lal obtained a decree against Makhan Lal, a son of the plaintiff, and in execution of the decree had Makhan Lal's share in three houses attached. Kundan Lal objected to the attachment under order XXI, rule 58, of the Code of Civil Procedure; his objection was summarily disallowed, and he brought the present suit under order XXI, rule 63, for a declaration that the houses, being the self-acquired property of Kundan Lal, could not be attached and sold in execution of the personal decree passed against Makhan Lal. The court of first instance dismissed the claim, holding that [565] the houses being the joint family property were liable to attachment and sale to the extent of the share of Makhan Lal, viz., one-third. Kundan Lal appealed to the District Juge, who confirmed the decree; but his findings material to the case were as follows:—

1. Jawahir Lal left three sons, namely, Mangal Sen, the father of the plaintiff, Mohan Lal, and Bhupat, and he left no ancestral property in fact.

2. Mohan Lal purchased the first house in 1839 in his own name and the second in 1860, and Kundan Lal the plaintiff purchased the third in 1890. Bhupat and Mohan Lal had both died childless, and the plaintiff succeeded to them.

4. The family of the three brothers was joint, and after the death of Bhupat the house passed by survivorship to the plaintiff. The plaintiff appealed.

Pandit Mohan Lal Sandal, for the appellant :—

As the houses devolved from his uncle to the plaintiff, the houses were his self-acquired property. Reliance was placed on Gurumurthi Reddi v. Gurammal (1) and Garur Prasad v. Ram Partap (2). He submitted that only property inherited directly from the father or grandfather was ancestral property in which the sons had a vested interest by birth ; Mitakshara, chap. 1, sec. 11, pla. 3,27 and 33, sec. 5, pla. 3; Kanhya Lal v. Lal Bahadur (3); Mayne's Hindu Law, S. 275. As there was no ancestral property, and as there is no evidence that the houses were purchased from joint family funds or with joint labour, the houses were the self-acquired property of Kundan Lal ; Shiu Golam Singh v. Baran Singh (4): Radhika Prasad v. Mt. Dharma Das (5); Babu Nand Coomar Lal v. Moulvie Razeeooddeen Hossen (6); Chatturbhooj Meghji v. Dharamsi Naranji (7) ; Ram Kishan Das v. Tunda Mal (8). The property may be joint without being [566] ancestral and it is only in the ancestral property that the sons have vested interest.

Munshi Benode Behari (with him Pandit Sham Krishna Dar) for the respondents :—

The family being joint the houses passed by survivorship to Kundan Lal. So it cannot be said that the property descended collaterally on Kundan Lal. Reliance was placed on the remarks of Bhashyam Iyyangar, J. in Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (11). He referred to Mayne's Hindu Law as showing that there are many kinds of property in which sons have vested interest. He further invited the attention of the Court to the remarks of the Munsif in his judgment, in which he passed stricture on the plaintiff for having colluded with his son to defraud his creditor.

Pandit Mohan Lal Sandal, was heard in reply.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff sought a declaration that certain house property which had been attached in execution of a decree against his son, Makhan Lal, was the sole property of the plaintiff and therefore not liable to attachment and sale.

The facts as found by the court below are as follows. Jawahir Lal had three sons, Mangal Sen, Mohan Lal and Bhupat Lal. Mangal Sen died first, leaving a son, Kundan Lal, the plaintiff in the present suit. Mohan Lal died next and then Bhupat. Neither Mohan Lal nor Bhupat left issue. Two of the houses were acquired in the name of Mohan Lal. The third house was acquired in the name of Kundan Lal, the plaintiff, in the year 1890. The court below has found, and in second appeal we are bound by its finding, that Mangal Sen, Mohan Lal, Bhupat and the plaintiff, Kundan Lal, constituted a joint undivided Hindu family. The next finding is not very clear, but we take it to be this, that there was no evidence given that the ancestor Jawahir Lal had any ancestral property, or that Mangal Sen, Mohan Lal and Bhupat took any property by survivorship upon the death of Jawahir Lal. Under these circumstances the lower appellate court affirmed the decree of the court of first instance and dismissed the [567] plaintiff's suit, holding that the property attached was joint family property.

The appellant contends that from the mere fact that Mangal Sen, Mohan Lal, Bhupat and Kundan Lal constituted a joint Hindu family, it must not be presumed that the property which was acquired in the name of Mohan Lal was joint property; and that therefore it must be taken that Kundan Lal inherited the houses which were acquired in the name of Mohan Lal and did not take them by survivorship, and that therefore the property was in his hands not as ancestral or joint family property in which his son took any interest. In support of this contention the case of Gurumurthi Reddi v. Guvammal (1) is cited, also the cases of Ram Kishan Das v. Tunda Mal (2) and Shiu Golam Sing v. Baran Sing (3) and several other cases. In the case of Ram Kishan Das v. Tunda Mal the facts were not unlike the facts of the present case except that in that case it was the decree-holder who brought the suit for a declaration that the property which he had attached was liable to attachment and sale.

The respondent contends that on the finding that Mangal Sen, Mohan Lal, Bhupat and Kundan Lal constituted a joint Hindu family, it ought to be presumed that the property which was acquired in the name of Mohan Lal was joint family property.

In the absence of authority to the contrary, it seems to me that on principle there ought to be a presumption that property in the possession of a joint Hindu family, even though acquired in the name of a particular member of that family, is joint family property. The very idea, it seems to me, of a joint undivided Hindu family is complete unity of interest and joint possession of all property. No doubt members of a joint Hindu family can acquire and own separate property, but it would seem to me that this is somewhat abnormal and exceptional condition of things which ought to be proved. It must be remembered that there can be joint family property which is not ancestral. Such seems to have been the opinion of Sir RICHARD COUCH in the case of [568] Tarruck Chundar Totadar v. Joodhesh-teer Chundar Kundoo (4). However this may be, the case of Ram Kishan Das v. Tunda Mal (2) is an authority that where it is not proved that there was any nucleus of ancestral property, there is no presumption that property acquired in the name of any individual member, or in his possession, is joint family property, and some dissent is passed against the view taken by RICHARD COUCH in the case already mentioned. It seems to me, however, that it is unnecessary in the present case to express any view on the correctness of the decision of Ram Kishan Das v. Tunda Mal, because I think that in the present case it is necessary for the plaintiff to estabilish the proposition that where property has been acquired in the name of a member of a joint and undivided Hindu family, there is not only no presumption that the property is joint, but that there is actually a presumption the other way, viz, that the property is separate. This, I think, would be a very great expansion of the decision of Ram Kishan Das v. Tundamal. It seems to me that the plaintiff coming into court and seeking a declaration that property which was acquired at the time the family was joint, it lay upon him to show that the property was the separate property of the individual member of the family in whose name it was acquired. It may be urged that the mere fact that the property was acquired in his name raises some presumption that it was his separate property. It seems to me that such a contention has no force. It is well known that property which is undoubtedly joint is acquired in the name of individual members of the family. A joint family frequently consists of a large number of members, many of whom may be infants of tender years or absent. In many cases it would be practically impossible to acquire the property in the names of all the family. It is common knowledge that joint property is seldom acquired in the names of all the members and not always in the name of the manager. This being so, and the normal and natural condition of the family being one of complete unity of interest, I cannot hold that any presumption arises from the mere fact that the property has been acquired in the name or names of one or more members of the joint family. If this view be correct, the plaintiff ought to have proved that the property was acquired [569] with the separate property of Mohan Lal, or at least that after its acquisition he held it as separate property excluding the other members. I may mention here that it was assumed in the arguments that if the houses acquired in the name of Mohan Lal were joint, the property in the other house was joint also.

PIGGOTT, J.—I should like to add a few words. There are three houses in dispute, one purchased in the name of Kundan Lal in the year 1890 and two purchased in the name of Mohan Lal in the years 1839 and 1860. With regard to the first of these houses there is a plea in the memorandam of appeal that, inasmuch as this house was purchased by a father during the minority of his sons, they cannot possibly have any share therein. It seems to me worth pointing out that no attempt has been made to support by argument the proposition of law here suggested. There seems on the contrary a clear presumption, unless and until the contrary is proved, that the property purchased by Kundan Lal during the minority of his sons was purchased by him out of funds which formed the joint family property of himself and of his sons.

As regards the two houses acquired in the name of Mohan Lal I wish to say only this much, that I might have found some difficulty in distinguishing the present case from that reported in I. L. R., 33 All., 677, if this were a suit in which Mohan Lal himself, or a transferee from Mohan Lal, was contesting a claim based upon a plea that the said houses had all along been the property of the joint family of which Mohan Lal was a member. As the facts stand, all that we know is that these houses have belonged, for over seventy years and over fifty years respectively, to persons who were members of the same joint family and have devolved amongst members of that family with nothing to show that anyone of them ever, expressly or by implication, claimed them as his self-acquired property.

It seems to me that there is a presumption that the property thus devolved by survivorship and not by inheritance, and that this presumption is not rebutted by the mere fact that the purchase deeds of 1839 and 1860 stand in the name of Mohan Lal alone. I agree with the learned Chief Justice that some further evidence should have been tendered by the plaintiff, [570] in order to entitle him to succeed in this suit. I concur in the proposed order.

Of two assessors assisting the Sessions Judge in the trial of a sessions case, one only had been duly summoned to act as an assessor in that case. The other was a gentleman of some position who had formerly been on the list of assessors but had been exempted on the recommendation of the District Magistrate. Held that in these circumstances there was no lawful trial before a lawfully constituted tribunal, and that a new trial must be ordered. Queen-Empress v. Badri (1) followed.

THIS was an appeal against a conviction and sentence had and passed at a sessions trial. At the hearing a preliminary objection was taken that the tribunal by which the appellant had been tried was not lawfully constituted, inasmuch as there was only one properly appointed assessor. The other assessor was in fact a gentleman who was at one time on the list of assessors, but whose name had been removed therefrom on the recommendation of the District Magistrate upon the ground that he was a large zamindar and his position in life and status were much better than those of persons of the class from which assessors were ordinarily selected.

If this be the case, we are surprised to find that this recommendation should have been made and should have met with approval. It is surely not too much to ask from Indian gentlemen of position and rank that they should assist in the administration of justice, as the sitting as an assessor can, if the list be properly prepared, occur very rarely, and probably only once in the course of three or four years. However this may be, there is no doubt that the trial of these accused persons, when one of the assessors only was an assessor summoned for the particular session is illegal, as has been pointed out in *Queen-Empress v. Hindu Law—Joint Hindu family—Mortgage—Guardian ad litem —Suit on mortgage executed by father prior to birth of son—Father appointed son's guardian ad litem.

Held that, inasmuch as an after-born son cannot on a suit on mortgage made by his father set up the defence of the immoral nature of the debt on account of which the mortgage was executed, it cannot be said that the [572] appointment of the father as guardian ad litem in such suit would be necessarily prejudicial to the interests of the son.

[Ref. 78 I. C. 260; Cf; 33 All. 315=14 A. L. J. 363; 25 I. C. 620; 15 C. L. J. 446=14 I. C. 845.]

THE facts of this case are fully set out in the judgment. Briefly stated, they were as follows:—

The plaintiff's father made a mortgage. At the time of making the mortgage he was the sole owner of the property, as no sons had then been born to him and there were no co-parceners. In the suit brought by the mortgagee the plaintiff was also made a defendant and his father was appointed his guardian ad litem. The father admitted execution of the mortgage and its validity; a decree was passed, and the mortgaged property was sold. Subsequently the plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of possession of the property on the allegations that the mortgage debt had been incurred for immoral purposes and that he had not been properly represented in the mortgage suit, as his father was a person of immoral habits and not a proper person to represent his interests. The court of first instance dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plea set up by the plaintiff was not available to him, as he had not been born at the date of the mortgage. The lower appellate court remanded the suit holding that the first court should have received evidence as to the alleged immoral habits of the father in order to ascertain whether he was a fit person to have been appointed guardian of the plaintiff. The defendant appealed against the order of remand.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the appellant :—

The question, whether the plaintiff was properly represented or not by his father in the mortgage suit, is quite immaterial in this case. Not having been born at the date of the mortgage he had no right to question its validity. It is well-settled law that an after-born son cannot raise the plea of immorality of the mortgage debt. He had no defence whatsoever to the suit on the mortgage; so any want of proper representation cannot have prejudiced him at all. The first court rightly refused to take evidence as to the alleged immoral livelihood of the father. In fact, the son was not a necessary party to the mortgage suit at all.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the respondent :—

The mortgage suit was brought in 1890. At that time the rule of law laid down in the case of Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (1) [573] was in full force. At that time the son of the mortgagor was regarded as a very necessary party to a mortgage suit. If the plaintiff was not properly represented in the mortgage suit he would have a right to bring a fresh suit. It is necessary, therefore, to decide whether his father was a fit person to represent the plaintiff. His defence would be based on the fact that at the date of the suit he had acquired an interest in the property. At that time this defence would have a fair chance of success. The law as it now stands is of later development.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji referred to Chattarpal Singh v. Natha (2).

RICHARDS, C. J., and PIGGOTT, J:—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff sought to set aside a decree obtained in the year 1899 against him and his father. The decree in question was on a mortgage made in the year 1896, admittedly some two years before the birth of the plaintiff. It is admitted also that at the time of the mortgage the mortgagor had no other son and was in that sense the sole owner of the property mortgaged. When the suit was brought the present plaintiff had been born, and he was made a party to the mortgage suit under the guardianship of his father. A decree was obtained upon foot of the mortgage and the property was sold. Subsequently the father died, and, the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property proving insufficient, a further decree was obtained under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act and certain other property was sold. In these proceedings the plaintiff's mother was substituted as his guardian for his deceased father. The court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The lower appellate court has reversed that decision and remanded the case, holding that the plaintiff ought to have been allowed an opportunity to call evidence to show that his father was a man of immoral livelihood and that the mortgage debt had been incurred for immoral purposes. The present appeal is against this last mentioned order of remand.

It seems to us that there can be no question but that the plaintiff in the present suit was a party to the original mortgage suit. It is possible that his father was a person whom the court [574] might under certain circumstances not have appointed guardian. We have, however, to consider, before interfering with the proceedings of the year 1899, whether the irregularity, if such it was, caused any damage to the plaintiff. We have therefore to consider what possible defence could have been set up in the mortgage suit. It is suggested that he might have made the defence that the debt was incurred for immoral purposes. This no doubt would be a defence which the father as guardian might find a difficulty in setting up on behalf of his son. It is now settled law that such a defence cannot be set up where the mortgage was made whilst the mortgagor was the sole owner. It must be assumed that this was always the law, and indeed it has not been shown to us that it was not the accepted law in the year 1899. We may mention here that the present suit seeks to set aside the decree of 1899, but not the decree under section 90. We cannot see that the plaintiff has suffered any damage whatever by reason of the fact that he was represented by his father in the litigation of 1899. That the mortgage was not duly executed, failure of consideration and such like were all defences which the father could have set up on behalf of his son. With regard to the decree which was subsequently made under section 90, it may be pointed out that at that time the plaintiff was represented by his mother, who was undoubtedly able to put forward any possible defence that could be made including, if necessary, the immorality of her husband. For these reasons we think that the appeal must prevail.

We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order of the court below and restore the decree of the court of first instance with costs in all courts.

Appeal allowed.

An excise inspector searched the house of a person suspected to be in illicit possession of an excisable article, namely cocaine, and cocaine was found in the house.

Held that the subsequent conviction of the person in possession of the said house was rendered illegal by the fact that the excise inspector had not previously obtained a search warrant.

Emperor v. Allahdad Khan (1) and Emperor v. Hargobind (2) referred to.

Held also, that it is a reasonable presumption that an oath has been duly administered to a witness appearing before a court although the record of the court may contain no reference to that fact.

[Appl: 47 All. 575 ; Ref: 28 A. L. J. 364.]

THIS was a reference from the Sessions Judge of Saharanpur recommending that the conviction of and sentence upon one Sayeed Ahmad, who had been convicted by a Magistrate of the first class, of an offence under section 60 of the United Provinces Excise Act, 1913, and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 30, should be set aside. The facts of the case and the reasons for the learned Sessions Judge's recommendation are set forth in the order of the High Court.

The Assistant Government Advocate (Mr. R. Malecomson), for the Crown.

RYVES, J.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Saharanpur recommending that the conviction of Sayeed Ahmad under section 60 of the Excise Act be set aside. Sayeed Ahmad and Amir Ahmad were tried together under the same section. Both were convicted. Amir Ahmad was sentenced to rigoroua imprisonment for three weeks and to a fine of Rs. 1,000 and Sayeed Ahmad was fined Rs. 30 only. Amir Ahmad appealed and the learned Sessions Judge accepted his appeal and acquitted him. His judgment in that case forms part of the record in this reference and I have examined it carefully. I am, however, not concerned with the case of Amir Ahmad. One reason for [576] acquitting him was that the learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that the cocaine which was admittedly found on his premises was found in a place where it could easily have been planted and that there was evidence to show that certain enemies of Amir Ahmad might well have so planted it. The only reason why I refer to that judgment at all is because many of the points taken in this reference have been dealt with more elaborately in that case. The first ground taken by the learned Judge is that the search was illegal in that the Excise Inspector, although he had full opportunity of getting a search warrant, did not do so. I do not think that the absence of a search warrant affects the legality of the trial. This point was raised very recently in the case of King Emperor v. Allahdad Khan (1). In that case also there was no search warrant, nevertheless the Magistrate convicted the accused. On appeal the Additional Sessions Judge held that the search was illegal and that the absence of a search warrant was fatal to the case for the prosecution. He therefore acquitted the accused. Against this order of acquittal the Local Government appealed. The Bench which heard the appeal did not decide this point and the head-note to the case of King-Emperor v. Allahdad Khan is in this particular wrong. In the course of their judgment the learned Judges say that they would have some hesitation in holding that the search was legal. They do not say that the search was illegal and in the concluding words of the judgment they add "we think that it was the intention of the Legislature that in a case under section 63, where it is necessary to search a house, a search warrant should be obtained beforehand." But it will be noted that in spite of this observation this Court held the order of acquittal was wrong and the conviction of the accused was maintained. In another portion of his order of reference the learned Sessions Judge says "the question is whether in the absence of a warrant the whole search is not illegal and null and void and no conviction is legally sustainable as in analogous cases under the Gambling Act." The case just quoted is an authority for the proposition that whether the search was legal or not the conviction of the accused depended, not on the legality of the search, but on the fact that cocaine was found illegally in his [577] possession. I do not understand what the learned Sessions Judge means by the latter portion of the sentence quoted above. There is no analogy that I can see, between the Excise Act and the Gambling Act. In any case, a conviction under the Gambling Act is by no means necessarily invalid even if the search of the premises is made without a proper warrant. If a search under the Gambling Act is made illegally the only result is that certain presumptions which can be drawn under the Act, if the search was made in accordance with a properly obtained warrant, do not arise. If authority is wanted see Emperor v. Hargobind (1).

The next point taken by the learned Judge is that the record does not show that any witness was examined on oath and the trial was therefore apparently illegal. Again I cannot follow the learned Sessions Judge. The trial was held by the late Mr. Clement Wright, a Magistrate of the first class. It appears from the judgment in the other case that on this occasion and apparently this occasion for the first time, Mr. Wright recorded the evidence with his own hand and did not have it recorded in the vernacular as is the usual practice. It is true that the record does not show that an oath was administered to any of the witnesses, but I am not aware of any provision of law which requires a court examining a witness to record the fact that an oath was administered. At any rate, I do not think that the proper conclusion for the Sessions Judge to arrive at, because no note was made that an oath was administered to each witness, was that the whole trial was illegal. I may point out that in the case of Amir Ahmad, his counsel begged the court not to dispose of the appeal on that point. No suggestion was made, apparently, either in the grounds of appeal or otherwise, by any body, that as a matter of fact no oath was administered. I think the reasonable presumption would be, in the absence of any suggestion to the contrary, that proper procedure was followed. The learned Sessions Judge might have examined Mr. Wright before coming to the conclusion at which he arrived. He says that he did think of doing so, but thought it was impossible for Mr. Wright to remember whether an oath was administered in any particular case. But the learned Sessions Judge has pointed out that on this particular case Mr. Wright adopted an. [578] unusual procedure. He might therefore very well have been able to remember whether or not he administered an oath to each witness. Having regard to the care with which he seems to have tried the case, I do not think it at all likely that he, a Magistrate of the first class, would omit to administer the oath before recording a witness's deposition. I would also refer the learned Judge to section 13 of the Indian Oaths Act.

The third ground is that the finding of the small packet of cocaine is most suspicious. This is a question of fact, and after examining the record carefully I am not in agreement with the learned Sessions Judge.

The fourth ground taken is that the search was conducted in accordance with law. This is based on the finding that one of the search witnesses remained outside the shop while the other stood at the threshold while the search was being conducted. I see nothing improper in this, having regard to section 103 of the Code, of Crminal Procedure. The shop apparently was quite a small one and I have no doubt that the witnesses could see perfectly well what was going on, in fact perhaps better than if they had gone inside. In my opinion the trial was properly conducted and the conclusion arrived at by the Magistrate was right. I decline to interfere. Let the record be returned.

Record returned.

Act (Local) No. I of 1900 (United Provinces Municipalities Act), section 187 (1) (h)—Municipal election—Rules framed by the Local Government for regulation of elections—Validity of rules—Petition against successful candidate—Appeal.

Held (1) that the provisions of section 187 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act which gave power to the Local Government to make rules "generally for regulating all elections under the Act," were wide enough to include rules for the filing and decision of election petitions; and (2) that no [579] appeal lies from the order of a "competent court" passed on an election petition under rule 42 of the rules framed by the Local Government under section 187 (1), clause (h) of the Act. Khunne Lal v. Raghunandan Prasad (1) followed. Sundar Lal v. Muhammad Faiq (2) approved.

[Fol. 21 I. C. 655=12 A. L. J. 459.]

THIS was a petition asking for a declaration that the election of one Babu Nand Ram to the Municipal Board of Shahjahanpur was invalid. The Munsif before whom the petition was filed declared the election to be invalid, The defendant preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who held that no appeal lay from the Munsif's order and dismissed the appeal. The defendant thereupon appealed to the High Court. The case came up before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Tudball who made the following orders and referred the case to a Full Bench.

RICHARDS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a municipal election petition. The petition came before the Munsif of Shahjahanpur, who declared the election to be invalid. An appeal was preferred to the learned District Judge, who held that no appeal lay and dismissed the appeal on this ground.

Under section 187 of the Municipalities Act, I of 1900, the Local Government have power to make rules in the manner therein prescribed for various matters connected with municipal elections. Clause (h) is as follows:—"Generally for regulating all elections under this Act." In pursuance of the powers conferred or supposed to have been conferred under the section, the Local Government made the following rule:—"The validity of an election made in accordance with these rules shall not be questioned except by petition presented to a competent court within fifteen days after the day upon which the election was held by a person or persons enrolled in the Municipal electoral roll." When the draft rules were published the words were "presented to a District Magistrate" instead of "to a competent court." The question, therefore before us is whether, assuming the rule to have been duly made under section 187 of the Municipalities Act, an appeal lies. In the case of Khunni Lal v. Raghunandan Prasad (1) a Bench of this Court held that no appeal lay in a municipil election petition. It is quite obvious that if an appeal does lie, there can be in all municipal election cases at least one appeal, and in all cases where the petitioner goes in the first instance to the Munsif there can be two appeals. In almost all cases this would mean that the parties would be involved and the time of the court taken up in more or less useless litigation, because by the time the matter was finally decided the term of the election might easily have expired. Great confusion might also arise having regard to the provisions of Rule 42 and Rule 43. It seems to me that, whatever our decision on the question raised in the present appeal ought to be, the Government ought to seriously consider an amendment to Rule 42, by laying down in clear language the tribunal intended to try election petitions and prescribing such rights of appeal, if any, as are intended to be given. I feel, [580] however, that our decision upon the present question might possibly decide important questions of principle arising perhaps under totally different circumstances. I therefore think that the present appeal ought to be referred to a larger Bench.

TUDBALL, J.—I fully agree with the learned Chief Justice that the case does involve certain questions of principle which are of considerable importance and a decision on the point by a larger Bench is a necessity in the case. I therefore agree in the order proposed.

The case coming on before the Full Bench,

Babu Purushottam Das Tandan (with whom Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji), for the appellant, contended that, even if there were no rules framed by the Government in that behalf, under the common law a suit would lie to set aside an election, and wherever a suit was allowed there was an appeal allowed also under the rules of procedure prescribed for the Civil Courts. The rules made by the Government in regard to elections, which took away a right of appeal militated against the common law and were therefore ultra vires. Section 187 of the Municipalities Act conferred power on the Government to frame rules for the conduct of elections only up to the election stage and not beyond that. There was no statutory provision taking away the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. Every election petition was in effect a suit. A decree had been passed against the appellant and there must be some remedy provided to set it aside. Assuming that the rules were not ultra vires, there was an appeal allowed from the decree made by the Munsif. The Civil Procedure Code allowed an appeal from every decree and the order passed by the first court was in the nature of a decree. The court that exercised jurisdiction in such cases was a Civil Court. The Munsif was a Civil Court and a competent court. The word petition had been used in the rules, but no difference between a suit and petition appeared to have been intended. What was to be taken into consideration was the nature of the relief claimed and not merely the words used. The order of the Munsif was a final adjudication and was therefore a decree. Against a decree an appeal was allowed. The object of Rule 42 was to cut short the period of limitation and not to make any difference between a suit and a petition.

Munshi Gobind Prasad (with him Munshi Lachmi Narain) was not heard in reply.

[581] RICHARDS, C.J., BANERJI and TUDBALL, JJ.:—This appeal arises out of an election for the municipality of Shahjahanpur. It appears that Lala Nand Ram was a candidate for election and was declared duly elected. Chote Lal and Lachmi Narain presented a petition, under rule 42 of the election rules framed by the Local Government, in the Munsif's court. The result of the petition was that the election of Lala Nand Ram was declared void. Nand Ram, thereupon, presented an appeal to the District Judge. The District Judge held that he had no jurisdiction and dismissed the appeal. Nand Ram has now appealed to this Court.

It is argued on his behalf, first, that the rules framed by the Local Government are ultra vires; and, secondly, that even if these rules are valid, the order of the Munsif was a "decree" from which an appeal lay to the District Judge. Section 187 of the Municipalities Act, I of 1900, provides that the Local Government may frame forms for any proceeding of a "Board for which it considers that a form should be provided and may after previous publication make rules consistent with the Act and applicable to all Municipalities." Clause (h) provides for the making of rules "generally for regulating all elections under the Act."

35 A. 578=11 A. L. J. 945 =21 I. C. 575.

The contention of Nand Ram is that the powers of the Government are confined to making rules regulating matters up to election, but that for matters arising after the election there is no power conferred by the Act upon the Local Government to make rules. In our opinion, although the clause is not very happily expressed, the words used are wide enough to permit of the Local Government framing rules connected with elections, whether before or after the counting of votes and declaration of the poll, and that it was within the power of the Government to frame rules providing for the decision of questions relating to the validity of municipal elections. In pursuance of the powers conferred by section 187 the Local Government framed the following rule:—"The validity of an election made in accordance with these rules shall not be questioned except by a petition presented to a competent court, within fifteen days after the day on which the election was held, by a person or persons enrolled in the municipal election roll." Clause (2) of this rule is as follows:—"If the election be declared void, the person whose election was questioned [582] shall, as from the date of the decision of the Court trying the petition, vacate his office as member of the Board, and shall, if the court which tried the petition so direct, be disqualified for any period not exceeding five years from being elected as member of the Board." This rule is very vague and unsatisfactory. To refer the parties to a "competent court," without giving any definition of that tribunal, was certainly calculated to create great confusion and uncertainty, as also was the omission to provide expressly that the decision of the tribunal should be final. We are glad to say that the Government contemplate an alteration of the rules, which in our opinion is very much needed. Giving the best construction we can to this rule, we consider that it was intended to provide that the validity of municipal elections should only be tested by an election petition presented to one tribunal, and that the decision of that tribunal should be final. The same view has been taken by a Bench of this Court in the case of Khunni Lal v. Raghunandan Prasad (1). The Second Additional Judicial Commissioner of Oudh took a similar view in the case of Sundar Lal v. Muhammad Faiq (2). If this view be correct (and on the whole we think it is) then the decision of the Munsif was final and no appeal lay to the lower appellate court, and the appeal was properly dismissed. We dismiss the appeal. We direct the parties to bear their own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Held that section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure (1908) does not entitle the court to extend the time fixed by the decree for payment of the purchase-money in pre-emption cases.

[583] THIS was an appeal under section 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of a single Judge of the Court. The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment under appeal, which was as follows :—

" These appeals arise out of cross suits for pre-emption. In each case, the plaintiffs were given a decree for pre-emption of half of the property, and the decree went on to provide that if they did not pay the price within a month their claim would stand dismissed and, in that event, the plaintiffs in the other case were allowed a further period of fifteen days within which to pay in the price, so that if either set of plaintiffs failed to pay in the price, the other set would be entitled to take the whole of the property on complying with the terms of the decrees. The decrees in both cases were made on the 17th of June, 1911, and the period of one month expired on the 17th of July, No money was a paid into court in either case by that date.

" On the 19th of July Kirat Singh and others, the plaintiffs' in one case, petitioned the court to grant an extension of the time limited by the decree, and by an order of the 25th of July time was extended to the 4th of August, Each set of plaintiffs paid into court the price specified in their decree before the 4th of August The purchaser objected, but his objection was overruled. He then appealed to the District Judge in both cases and it was held that the first court had no power to extend the time limited by the decrees. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court contending that there was no right of appeal to the District Judge against the orders of the first court, and that if the appeals were in order, the District Judge should have upheld the orders of the first court on the merits.

"The purchaser has applied in each case for revision of the orders of the first court in case it is held that those orders were not appealable.

"The plaintiffs rely upon section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure as authorising the Munsif to extend the time fixed in the decrees. In Jug Ram v. Jewa Ram (2) BANERJI and TUDBALL JJ., expressed grave doubts whther this section applied to suits for pre-emption, and in Hukam Chand v. Hayat (3), REID, C. J., held that this section did not apply to periods fixed by a decree. To the same effect is the decision of Messrs. EVANS and PIGGOTT in Narendra Bahadur v. Ajudhya Prasad (4). I agree with the views expressed in these cases. It appears to me that the payment of money into court within a fixed time in pursuance of a decree is not an act prescribed or allowed by the Code within the meaning of section 148. According to the decision in Rahima v Nepal Rai (5), which is binding upon me. I must hold that the orders of the Munisif were appealable. In my opinion the District Judge was right in setting those orders aside. The two appeals to this Court are dismissed with costs."

The pre-emptors appealed under section 10 of the Letters Patent.

[584] Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the pre-emptors appellants, contended that the order under section 148, Civil Procedure Code, not being a decree, was not appealable : the case of Rahima v. Nepal Rai (1) was under section 87 of the Transfer of Property Act. There the order was a decree and therefore was appealable. An order for the extension of time does modify a part of the decree, but does not come within the definition of decree, which is a limited one in its nature. A revision would have to be filed against the order of amendment when the court had no power to make such amendment. An order under section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not of the nature of the amendment of the decree. The decree was in fact never amended. It was submitted that section 148 applied to the case and no appeal lay from the order passed under that section as it could not be deemed to be a decree. If section 148 gave a discretion to the Munsif in pre-emption cases to extend time, it was properly exercised and the District Judge ought not to have interfered with the Munsif's order. If it did not apply, there was no appeal against the Munsif's order. The only remedy was an applicatiou for revlsion whioh had been filed and rejected. Section 148 could apply to such cases as well. Special provision was necessary in mortgage suits, as the Legislature intended that time in those cases should be extended only when there was good cause shown for it. Section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure gave a discretion even when no good cause was shown. Order XX, rule 14, of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribed or allowed the payment into court of the purchase money, and when any period was fixed or granted by the court for the doing of any act prescribed or allowed by the Code, the court could extend the time under section 148. The words used in the section were "prescribes" or " allows " and when the court allowed time for payment it was the act of payment that was the act allowed.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the vendees respondents, submitted that an appeal lay from the order as that order was substituted for the original decree. Mr. Amir Ali's Civil Procedure Code, p. 837, was cited. Further the order for extension of time was in effect an order in execution and was, therefore, appealable. The respondent [585] then might be allowed to apply for a review of the order rejecting the revision.

RICHARDS, C. J., BANERJI and TUDBALL, J.J.:—The facts out of which this and the connected appeal, No. 28 of 1913 under the Letters Patent, arise, are shortly as follows:—Two suits for pre-emption were brought by rival pre-emptors. These suits resulted in decrees by which the pre-emptors obtained the property in equal shares, conditional upon their paying their half shares of the purchase money into court, within the time specified in the decrees. The time specified elapsed without the purchase money having been paid by either pre-emptor.

Applications were thereupon made, purporting to be under section 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure, asking the court to extend the time of payment of the purchase money. The learned Munsif granted the application and extended the time. The purchase money was paid into court within the extended time.

Appeals were preferred by the defendants vendees against the order of the Munsif extending the time. Afterwards the decrees were put into execution. The appeal against the order of the Munsif extending the time coming before the District Judge, he held that section 148 did not apply and accordingly set aside the orders of the Munsif.

Second appeals were then preferred to this court by the decree-holders on the ground that the decision of the Munsif was correct and ought not to have been interfered with by the District Judge, and, secondly, on the ground that no appeal lay to the District Judge. The vendees filed applications in revision contending that the Munsif had no jurisdiction under section 148 to extend the time. The second appeals and the applications in revision came before a learned Judge of this Court, who held that an appeal did lie to the District Judge and that his orders setting aside the orders of the Munsif were correct, and dismissed the second appeals. The applications for revision were dismissed because the learned Judge thought that there was no necessity for revision.

The plaintiffs have appealed under the Letters Patent.

The first question which we propose to deal with is whether the learned Munsif was right in extending the time for the payment of the purchase money under the provisions of section 148 of [586] the Code of Civil Procedure. That section is as follows:—" Where any period is fixed or granted by the court for the doing of any act prescribed or allowed by this Code, the court may in its discretion, from time to time, enlarge such period, even though the period originally fixed or granted may have expired."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that order XX, rule 14, "prescribes" or" allows" the payment into court of the purchase money by the successful pre-emptor. On reading order XX, rule 14, it will at once appear that all that is " prescribed" by the Code is the form which the decree in a pre-emption suit is to take where the plaintiff is successful and has not paid the money into court before decree. It nowhere prescribes or allows the payment into court of the purchase money. Such payment is in reality an incident of the claim for pre-emption. All that the order provides for is uniformity in the form of the decree which the courts make. We agree with the view taken by the learned Judge of this court that section 148 does not entitle the court to extend the time fixed by the decree for the payment of the purchase money in pre-emption cases.

The next question is whether an appeal lay from the decision of the Munsif to the District Judge. Appeals only lie from decrees as defined by section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure and from orders as specified in section 104. It seems to us that an order made under section 148 is clearly not an appealable order and is not a decree within the definition in section 2, nor is it an order covered by section 104. The only way therefore in which this order could have been set aside was by an application in revision to this Court. We at present have no application in revision before us.

The learned Judge of this Court was of opinion that he was bound by the ruling in Rahima v. Nepal Rai (1). In that case it was held that an order under section 87 of Act No. IV of 1882 extending the time for payment of the mortgage money by a mortgagor was a decree within the meaning of sections 2 and 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. We may point out that that case entirely proceeded under the rulings of this Court in which it had been held that proceedings under the Transfer of [587] Property Act, subsequent to decree, were questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. This is certainly not so under the new Code. Special provision is, however, made for mortgage decrees and orders refusing to extend the time are expressly made appealable under order XLIII, rule 1, clause (o).

Under these circumstances we must allow the appeal, and set aside the decree of this Court and also of the District Judge. The parties will pay their own costs.

Appeal allowed.

At the regular settlement, shortly afterwards, the grantee recovered decrees for possession of other villages; and subsequently acquired other properties by purchase. In respect of all the settled villages his name was entered in Lists 1 and 2 prepared under the statutory provisions of s. 8 of the Act. In a suit for partition to which the defence was that all the property was impartible. Held (affirming the decisions of the Courts in India) that the grantee (the defendant was on the construction of the provisions of Act I of 1869 relating there to, a " taluqdar," and the villages so settled with him formed, within the meaning of the Act, an "estate" which was impartible and descendible to a single heir. On a question whether the delay in executing the kabuliat deprived the taluqa of the character of an "estate" defined in s. 2 of the Act, the Judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court differed in opinion. Held, in the absence of an express declaration that non-execution within the time specified would be fatal to the right given to the grantee by s. 3, that no such construction could be put on that section; but the execution of the kabuliat related back to the date of the settlement, namely, the 5th of October, 1859. As to the after-acquired properties the defendant contended that by the custom of the family they became part of the original estate and were therefore not subject to the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance. Held (affirming the decisions of both Courts below) that the evidence was insufficient to establish that custom: that no intention of the taluqdar was shown to incorporate the subsequently acquired properties with the taluqa, as was necessary on the authority of the case of Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jagdis Chunder Dhabal, I. L. R. 29 Cal. 433 (453); L. R. 29 I. A. 82 (98), and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to a decree for his share (one half, of such properties as being partible. Gomti Kunwar, who had acquired it under a will executed by her husband. The Court of first instance granted him a decree for possession, but limited to the life-time of Musammat Gomi. The defendant appealed, and the plaintiff also appealed, seeking to have this condition removed from the decree, and paid a court fee of Rs. 10 on his memorandum of appeal. Held that the court fee was sufficient, the plaintiff appellant being in the position of a person in possession of property who sought to clear his title and to obtain a declaration that he had the full right of ownership to the property. S. 21—Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), s. 31—Limitation—Mortgage with possession—Realization of rents and profits equivalent to receipt of interest as such under the terms of the mortgage.—Under the terms of a mortgage deed executed in 1850 the mortgagee was to take possession of the mortgaged property and appropriate the rents and profits in lieu of interest. The mortgagee remained in possession up to 1889 when he was dispossessed. In 1910 he brought a suit for sale. Held, that the realization of rents and profits in lieu of interest was equivalent to the receipt of interest as such under the terms of the mortgage and therefore under s. 21 of Act No. IX of 1871 the mortgagee was entitled to compute limitation from the year 1889, Act No. XV of 1877 having by that time come into operation, the plaintiff was in 1910 entitled to bring his suit within the limitation provided by s. 31 of Act No. IX of 1908. S. 44—Res judicata—Fixed rate tenancy—Partition—Power of joint tenants to partition—Suit to recover joint possession.—A certain holding owned jointly by tenants at fixed rates was partitioned by an award. One party sued on the award to recover exclusive possession of certain plots and obtained a decree for possession and mesne profits, which was executed. Subsequently the other party sued to regain joint possession of these plots and pleaded that the former decree was by a court not competent to pass it and therefore not binding on them. There was nothing to show whether the former suit was filed before or after the coming into force of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, or whether the landlord had or had not assented to the partition Held that the plaintiffs had failed to show that the former decree was passed by a court which had not jurisdiction, and that the present suit was barred. Achhey Lal v. Janki Prasad, I. At the time of the institution of a suit for sale thereon, all the executants and the attesting witnesses were dead, and the evidence tendered in proof of the mortgage consisted of (1) the statement of a witness who professed to be acquainted with the handwriting of two of the attesting witnesses, (2) a deed of usufructuary mortgage executed by one of the executants of the mortgage in suit and by the representative of the two other executants, which referred to and recognized the genuineness of the mortgage in suit, and (3) a deed of sale executed in 1902 by the representatives or some of the representatives of the executants of the deed in suit, which recognized the genuineness of the usufructuary mortgage mentioned above. Held that, having regard to sections 69 and 70 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, this evidence was not sufficient to prove the mortgage in suit. with payment of debt endorsed by agent of mortgagee—Rebuttal of defendants' evidence by plaintiff with false story.—In a suit for money due on a mortgage bond, the plaintiff produced only a copy of the document, alleging in his plaint that it had been lost. The defendant admitted its execution, but alleged that the debt had been discharged; and in support of his allegation he produced the original document containing the endorsement of the mortgagee through her agent of payment of the debt. The Subordinate Judge, relying on s. 114 of the Evidence Act, put the onus on the plaintiff, who to account for the possession of the bond by the defendant, set up a case supported by witnesses which both courts below held to be false. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. The Judges of the Judicial Commissioner's Court disbelieved the evidence on both sides, set aside the presumption under s. 114 of the Evidence Act, and endeavoured to make out a case for the plaintiff based on a theory of their own. Held (reversing that decision) that the first Court was right in holding that the production by the defendant of the bond with the endorsement of payment cast on the plaintiff the burden of proving that the debt was still outstanding; and that the appellate Court should not have disregarded the presumption under s. 114 in favour of a "possibility" based on surmise. Within three years of his coming of age the younger son sued for a declaration that the sale of 1906, and mortgage executed in 1902 were not binding on his interest in the property purporting to be dealt with thereby. Held (1) that the appointment of the mother as guardian had the effect of prolonging the minority of both sons until they reached the age of twenty-one years and (2) that the sanction of the Judge given in 1891 could not validate a sale which was not made until 1906. Gharib-ullah v. Khalak Singh 25 All. 407 distonguished SHAMI NATH SABI v. LALJI CHAUBE, 35 All. 150 1124

A's son, S. M. died a week later leaving his mother H and his grandmother M. The property was then recorded in the name of M and H; but M. got possession, and in 1908 executed a will in favour of her daughter S. The reversioners of D brought a suit in 1908 for a declaration that the will would have no effect on their reversionary right. S set up her right to the property, ignoring that of H. Held, that even during the lifetime of H, the plaintiffs were entitled to institute a suit for a declaration only under the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Held further that the suit was not barred by limitation. Mutation of names in M's favour was more or less an equivocal act and might possibly have given a cause of action, but when in 1908 M specifically declared that the heir to the property was S and S herself asserted her title, the plaintiffs acquired a cause of action sufficient to entitle them to sue. The matter came up before the District Registrar by means of an application under s. 73 of the Registration Act, and the presence of the executants having been secured, the District Registrar ordered that the document should be registered. The document was apparently then sent by the Registrar to the Sub-Registrar by whom it was registered Held that in the absence of evidence to the contrary it must be presumed that the karinda who presented the document was duly authorized in that behalf, and further that, even if the Registrar had in fact sent the document direct to the Sub-Registrar, instead of returning it to the person who had presented it for registration, this fact alone was not sufficient to invalidate the registration. Mohammed Ewaz v. Brij Lall, L. Under Art. 148 of sch. II, to that Act the period of limitation prescribed for a suit to redeem a mortgage was 60 years from the time when the right to redeem accrued, and by s. 19 an acknowledgment to be effective must be "signed by the party against whom such right is claimed or by some person through whom he claims title." Held that the respondents derived title through the last male owner, and not through his widow and daughter, who were therefore not competent under section 19 to make an acknowledgment of the right of redemption so as to bind any interests except their own. To hold otherwise would be to extend the power of a Hindu female in possession of a limited interest to bind the estate to an extent which was not sanctioned by authority. An acknowledgment of liability only extends the period of limitation within which the suit must be brought, and does not confer title, and, with reference to section 2 of Act XV of 1877, was not a "thing done" within the meaning of section 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868). There was nothing in article 148 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877 to justify a holding that by reason of the fusion of the interests of the mortgagor and mortgagee (which it was alleged, took place between the years 1883 and 1898) the period of limitation which began to run on the 3rd of January, 1842, was suspended; which would be deciding contrary to section 9 of the Act: this suit not being one to which the proviso to that section applied. Barrel v. Earl of Euremont, (1) distinguished. S. 77 Suit against railway company—Notice—Limitation—Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), schedule I, art. 31—Waiver of notice.—Certain goods were despatched on the 26th of March 1908, from Bombay to Ghazipur. The goods were lost in transit while in possession of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company. The consignee made a claim against the East Indian Railway Company, as the result of which he was offered a certain sum as compensation by the assistant traffic manager of that company, who stated that he did so with the authority of the deputy traffic manager of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company. There was, however, no proof that any such authority had been given, and the offer was refused. On the 9th August 1909, the consignee brought a suit against the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company for damages for the loss of his goods, but did not give the notice required by s. 77 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890. He claimed that certain conditions printed on the back of the railway receipt releived him of the necessity of giving notice under s. 77. Held that this was not so; nor did the action of the assistant traffic manager of the East Indian Railway Company amount to a waiver of notice. In 1890 the Secretary of State sued the then occupant for a declation of title and assessment of ground rent, or, in the event of the defendant refusing to pay rent, for possession. Held that the circumstances of the case warranted the presumption that the title to the land in suit was vested in the Crown, and that the possession thereof could not be regarded as adverse until at the earliest the year 1874, when the land in suit ceased to be a part of the cantonment. Secretary of State for India v. Jagan Prasad, I. Arbitration.

Arbitrator refusing to act—Compromise of suit and decree in terms of compromise—Compromise stating matters in dispute and nominating arbitrators to decide them—Power of Court on arbitrator refusing to act—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 375, 506, 508, 510.—Court determining matters referred to arbitration.—S. 510 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) which provides that " if an arbitrator refuses to act the Court may in its discretion appoint a new arbitrator . . . . or make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit," is applicable even if the person appointed arbitrator has not accepted office before refusing to act. When he has been nominated by the parties his refusal to act is signified as clearly by his refusal to accept nomination as by any other course he could pursue; and any other construction would defeat the provisions of the Act. Pugardin Ravutan v. Moidinsa Ravutan, I. L. R. 6 Mad. 414, and Bepin Behari Chowdhury v. Annoda Prosad Mallick, I. L. R. 18 Cal. 324 disapproved of. In the present case the parties had compromised the suit, and had stated in the instrument of compromise the matters in dispute, and had each nominated therein a person as arbitrator to decide them. A decree in terms of the compromise was made by the Court and the matters were referred to the arbitrators named for their decision. One of them refused to act, and the party whose nominee he was declined to make another nomination. The District Judge in the exercise of his discretion under s. 510 of the Code thereupon himself determined the matters submitted to the arbitrators, thus practically superseding the arbitration. His decision was confirmed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Held (reversing the decision of the Courts in India) that the District Judge should, under s. 510, have appointed a new arbitrator, which he had power to do notwithstanding that the arbitrator refusing to act had not first consented to do so, and he was not precluded from making such appointment by the fact that the party whose arbitrator had refused to act declined to assist the Court by suggesting another name. The Court could not " proceed with the suit," which had been put an end to by the compromise, the decree on which was final: and it had no power except by consent of parties to itself decide the matters referred to arbtiration. That rights, having been remitted to one tribunal, had been decided by another, was a fatal objection to the procedure adopted. SADIQ HUSSAIN v. NAZIR BEGAM, 33 All. 743 ... 497

Ss. 230, 235—Execution of decree—Limitation—Application for execution whether a fresh application or merely a continuance of a subsisting application.—The subsequent application to execute the same decree mentioned in s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, means a substantive application for execution in the form prescribed by s. 235 of the Code. Hence, where an application for execution in accordance with s. 235 of the Code has been made within the period of limitation prescribed by s. 230 and has been granted, that is, execution has been ordered in accordance with the prayer of the decree-holder's application, the right of the decree-holder to obtain execution will not necessarily be defeated, if, by reason of objections on the part of the judgment-debtor or action taken by the court or other cause for which the decree-holder is not responsible, final completion of the proceedings in execution initiated by the application under s. 235 cannot be obtained within the period limited by s. 230. Further applications of the decree-holder to the court executing the decree to go on from the point where the execution proceedings had been arrested and complete execution of his decree would be applications merely ancillary to the substantive application under s. 235 and would not be obnoxious to the bar of s. 230. Rahim Ali Khan v. Phul Chand. S. 230—Execution of decree—Limitation—Application for transfer of decree—Subsequent application for execution not in continuation of application for transfer.— Held that an application for execution can in no sense of the words be regarded as an application in continuation of an applicatiou for transfer of a decree from one court to another. In order that an application may be a continuation of another application, it is necessary that the two applications must be of the same nature, and the application for transfer being an application of an entirely different nature from that for execution of a decree does not suspend the operation of s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, Sundar Singh v. Doru Shankar, I. S. 230—Execution of decree—Decree upon compromise against lessees, and on their failure to pay against the property of their surety —Execution against lessess after the lapse of twelve years.—A decree for rent was passed upon a compromise against certain lessees and their surety. The decree provided that the amount of it should be realized in the first instance from the lessees by annual instalments, and in the event of failure, it would be recoverable by the sale of certain immoveable property which the surety had hypothecated. The decree was put into execution against the lessees as a simply money decree more than 12 years after the date of its passing. Held, that s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 applied, and the decree could not be executed after the expiration of 12 years from the date thereof. Pahalwan Singh v. Narain Das, I.L.R. 22 All.

the wife of the mortgagor brought a suit in forma pauperis against her husband and his mortgagees for dower, alleging that it was a charge on the mortgaged property in priority to the mortgage lien. It was found that the dower debt was not charged on the property, and on the 11th of May, 1897, her suit was dismissed as against the mortgagees, and a money decree passed against her husband alone: and under s. 411 of the Civil Procedure Code, XIV of 1882, the amount of the court fees due to Government was made a first charge on the amount decreed. Notwithstanding that the decree expressly dismissed the suit as against the mortgaged property, the Collector, in order to recover the court fees in the pauper suit brought it to sale, on the 22nd of July, 1899, in execution of the decree of the 11th of May, 1897, and recovered just enough to satisfy them. On the application of the respondents the Civil Court directed that the property should be again put up for sale in execution of the respondents' decree of the 17th of December, 1895, and on the the 20th of September, 1902, it was purchased at that sale by the respondents who got formal possession. The purchaser under the decree of the 11th of May, 1897, now represented by the appellants, had, however, then obtained possession, and there was a contest for mutation of names which resulted in the revenue courts upholding the right of priority of the Government for the court fees and the possession of the appellants. Held in a suit in the civil court by the respondents to enforce their priority and for possession, that they were entitled to succeed. The decree of the 11th of May, 1897, did not create, nor purport to create any charge on the mortgaged property; and the sale under it of the 22nd of July, 1899, being a sale of the property of the defendant in the suit for dower to satisfy a debt of the plaintiff in that suit, was without jurisdiction, and passed no title to the purchaser. Rights of zamindars in respect of house sites and groves.—In a suit for a declaration of the proprietary title of the appellants to certain lands in a village, the first court dismissed the suit on the ground that the respondent was the zamindar, and the appellants only tenants of the lands. The Subordinate Judge found on the construction of the wajib-ul-arz of the village and other documentary evidence that the appellants were the owners of the lands in suit. On second appeal to the High Court it was contended that the Court was bound under s. 584 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, to accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge as conclusive, the question being one of fact; but the High Court rejected that contention. Held (affirming that decision) that the Subordinate Judge's finding was arrived at by inferences drawn from a misconstruction of the wajib-ul-arz. The right construction of documents was a question of law which the Court on second appeal was not precluded from considering under ss. 584 and 585 of the Civil Procedure Code. On the true construction it was clear from the documentary evidence that the appellants were only tenants of the land, and not proprietors FATEH CHAND v. KISHAN KUNWAR, 34 All. 579. 943

The plaintiff, in a suit for redemption of a mortgage, obtained a decree which provided in the event of non-payment, not that he should be debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property but that his suit should be dismissed. Plaintiff, non-appearance of—Dismissal of suit—Order setting aside dismissal when plaintiff was found to have been dead at the time suit was dismissed—Civil Procedure Code (1908), order IX, rules 8 and 9—Order XXII, rules 3 and 9—S. 115 and 151—Rules and orders applicable only to defaulters wrongly applied in case of dead party. On the non-appearance of the plaintiff in a suit against the respondent an order was made on the 4th of July, 1911, dismissing the suit for default. The plaintiff was in fact dead at the time the order was made, and his son the appellant was engaged in performing his father's funeral ceremonies and was unable to attend court. These facts were brought to the notice of the Deputy Commissioner in an application made under order XXII, rr. 3 and 9, of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) by the appellant as the heir and legal representative of the plaintiff, which was filed and accepted by the Deputy Commissioner within the time allowed by law and an order was made on the 11th of September setting aside the dismissal of the suit, and substituting the name of the appellant on the record in place of the deceased plaintiff. On an application for revision of the Deputy Commissioner's order of the 11th of September made by the respondent under s. 115 of the Code to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, that Court reversed the order, and confirmed that decision on review, mainly on the grounds that the order of the 4th of July dismissing the suit wasa proper order under Or. IX, r. 8 of the Code; that the appellant's application to set aside that order was not within time, and was therefore barred, and that order XXII, r. 3, of the Code applied only to a still pending suit, and not to one that had been dismissed. Held (reversing the decisions of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner) that those decisions were vitiated by applying to a dead man orders and rules applicable only to a mere defaulter. An " abuse of the process of the Court " within the meaning of s. 151 of the Code had occurred by the course adopted in the Judicial Commissioner's Court. Quite apart from that section, any Court might rightly have considered itself to possess inherent power to rectify the mistake inadvertently made in dismissing the suit. The order of the Deputy Commissioner setting aside the dismissal was manifestly 'sensible and correct, and their Lordships restored it, and remitted the case to India to be disposed of on the merits. DEBI BAKSH SINGH v. HABIB SHAH, 35 All. 331 ... 1250

Or. XVII, r. 3; Or, XLI r. 27—Procedure—Order for parties to appear with witnesses at adjourned hearing—Default of plaintiff's witnesses—Dismissal of suit.—On the date for the hearing of a suit the parties and their witnesses were present, but, as there was some prospect of a compromise, the hearing was adjourned. On the adjourned date the plaintiffs were present, but their witnesses, though summoned, did not appear. The plaintiffs did not apply for an adjournment, nor did they ask the court to enforce the attendance of their witnesses under Or. XVI, r. 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and the court, acting apparently under Or. XVII, r. 3, of the Code, dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs appealed, and the District Judge, dealing with the case as if the plaintiffs had made default in appearing remitted the case to the first court to be disposed of according to law. Held that the procedure of the District Judge was erroneous: he should have proceeded under Or. XLI, r. 27, to direct the admission of fresh evidence, and under Or. XLI, r. 25, to refer the issues for trial to the Court of first instance. RAM NARAIN DUBE v. JAGDEO, 33 All. 690. 463

Or. XVII, r. 3; Or. IX, r. 4—Adjourned hearing—Suit dismissed on merits—Remedy of plaintiff—Procedure.—At an adjourned hearing of a suit in the court of a Munsif the plaintiffs were not present and their pleader intimated to the court that he had no instructions to go on with the case. The suit was thereupon dismissed under Or. XVII, r. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, on the ground that the claim was not proved. The plaintiffs then made an application for restoration under Order IX, r. 4. The munsif dismissed the application and his order was affirmed by the District Judge. Held, on application in revision by the plaintiffs, that no revision lay. The suit having been dismissed under Or. XVII, r. 3, of the Code on the merits, the plaintiffs' remedy was by way of appeal against the Munsif's decree. Lalta Prasad v. Nand Kishore, I. L. When the case went back to the court of first instance for the passing of a final decree that court passed an order directing that actual partition should be made in accordance with certain directions then given by it. Held that no appeal would lie against such an order, but its propriety could be questioned in appeal from the final decree. The Code of Civil Procedure contemplated the preparation of only one preliminary decree, and the order in question could not be regarded as more than an interlocutory order containing directions as to the preparation of the final decree. Winding up—Shares applied for subject to a condition, and partly paid for—Condition not fulfilled—Resolution of company to refund part-payment—Position of applicant as regards winding up proceedings.—A company started in Meerut in 1904, with objects of a very general nature, proposed in 1906 to erect a mill at Fyzabad, and accordingly issued a prospectus and invited the public to subscribe the necessary capital. On the faith of this prospectus one M. applied for shares, but added to his application a condition to the following effect:—"These shares are only subscribed on the condition that any mill is started in the suburbs of Fyzabad." The company, however, found that they could not raise the necessary funds to start a mill at Fyzabad, and therefore passed a resolution that the money already subscribed for that purpose should be refunded. But before this was done the company went into liquidation. Held that M. was in the circumstances not a member of the company, but a creditor and entitled to get back what he had already paid. Sale subject to agreement executed on the same day reserving right to vendor to repurchase—Documents to be read together—Mortgage. Two documents were executed by the same parties on the same day. The first purported to be an out and out sale of certain property, but was expressed to be "subject to the terms of the deed of agreement executed by the vendee." The agreement referred to was an agreement under certain conditions to reconvey the property purchased. Held that in the circumstances the two documents must be read together as constituting a mortgage by conditional sale. Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, I. Deed of sale followed after an interval by an agreement for repurchase—Sale—Mortgage by conditional sale.—A document purporting to be an out and out sale-deed was executed on a certain date and seven days later a second document was executed by the vendee whereby he covenanted to reconvey the property sold if the vendors paid back the purchase-money after the lapse of nine or ten years from the date of that sale-deed. The two deeds were separately stamped and were registered on different dates. Held, in view of the delay intervening between the two deeds and other circumstances attending their execution, that the two deeds were not intended to be parts of one and the same transaction so as together to constitute a mortgage by conditional sale, but must be construed separately, and were merely what they purported to be. Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, I. The appellant applied for sanction to prosecute them under s. 195, clause (7) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The sanction was refused by the Assistant Collector. Held, on application made to the District Judge to grant sanction, that no such application lay. The "case" in connection with which an offence was alleged to have been committed was the proceedings in execution, from which no appeal lay, and the District Judge was not in relation to such proceedings the "principal court of original jurisdiction." Ss. 195, 476—Sanction to prosecute—Sanction set aside by superior court and order for prosecution under s. 476 substituted—Jurisdiction.—Held that a court hearing an application under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to revoke sanction for a prosecution granted by a subordinate court has jurisdiction to set aside the order of the subordinate court and direct a prosecution under s. 476 of the Code. In the matter of the petition of Mathura Das, I. S. 195 (c)—Sanction to prosecute—Forgery—Offence alleged not in connection with any proceeding before any Court—Sanction unnecessary.—By s. 195, clause (c), of the Code of Criminal Procedure courts are prohibted from taking cognizance of an offence described in s. 463 of the Indian Penal Code, when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any court in respect to a document produced or given in evidence in any such proceeding. The section does not remove from the cognizance of criminal courts an offence described in s. 463 when such an offence has been committed by an ordinary individual. So long as the prosecution is confined to offences connected with a document committed prior to its production in court, such prosecution is within the law and requires no sanction. (3) of s. 35 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies only to consecutive and not to concurrent sentences. Where therefore an Assistant Sessions Judge passes concurrent sentences and the whole term to be served by the convict does not exceed four years, the appeal under s. 408 of the Code does not lie to the High Court but to the Sessions Judge. Sher Muhammad v. Emperor of India Punj. their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, while expressing their opinion that the question in the case might well be decided as one of fact on the appellant's own statement without recourse to the doctrine of estoppel, did not differ from the view of the High Court as to the applicability of that doctrine. The appellant, they held, had asserted her authority to adopt in the most solemn manner under her hand and seal, and her conduct both before and after that assertion had been of a like unequivocal character. She could not now be allowed to change her story without grave injustice ensuing to the respondent, who had acted in reliance upon her deliberate and repeated representations. The estoppel, however, their Lordships said, must be taken as being purely personal, and did not bind any one claiming by an independdent title, DHARAM KUNWAR v. BALWANT SINGH, 34 All. 398 ... 819

Admissibility of evidence - Family settlement—Evidence of settlement consisting of a joint application by the parties for mutation in respect of the property in dispute.—The brother and widow of a deceased Hindu settled a dispute between them as to the ownership of the property of the deceased by means of a joint application in the Revenue Court asking that the property should be recorded half in the name of each. Thereafter the widow sued to recover the share which had gone to her husband's brother. Held, that it must be presumed from the application in the mutation proceeding, the recording of names by the Revenue Court in accordance with that application and the subsequent sales on the strength of that record, that the parties entered into a family arrangement, and the application presented to the Revenue Court was, therefore, not compulsorily registrable and was admissible in evidence. Assignment—Ex parte order passed subsequent to assignment—Power of court on application of assignee to reconsider such order. Pending an application for execution of a decree the decree-holder sold the decree. The purchaser applied for execution; but whilst his application was pending the former application of the original decree-holder came on for hearing and, it was decided, ex parte, that the decree was barred by limitation. Held, that this decision was no bar to the consideration of the application for execution filed by the assignee of the decree nor was the court hearing this application bound by the former ex parte finding. Limitation—Suit for sale on a mortgage—Decree payable by instalments—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 258—Civil Procedure Code (1908), Or. XXI, r. 2, Or. XXXIV, r. 5—Act No. IX of 1908 (Indian Limitation Act), Sch. 1, Art. 181.—On a compromise in a suit for sale on a mortgage a decree followed providing that the sum found due on the mortgage (Rs. 1,374), with interest at a certain rate, should be paid by instalments of Rs. 100 a year, along with the interest then due. Payments were to be made by the end of Jeth in each year, beginning with Jeth 1957 Fasli (June 1900) and it was provided that if default were made for three years in succession in the payments and interest, the decree-holder would be at liberty to recover at once the whole amount payable under the decree, that is, to apply for an order absolute for sale and execute the same. No payment was made in 1900 or 1901, but in June 1902, just before the end of Jeth 1959 Fasli, the judgment-debtor paid up all that was due on account of the first three years. He made no payment in 1903, but in June 1904 he paid up all that was due up to the end of Jeth 1960 Fasli (June 1903). No payment was made in 1905, but in June

1906 he paid the instalment and interest which he ought to have paid in Jeth 1961 Fasli (June 1904). This payment was covered by the proviso to s. 20 (1) of the Limitation Act. The only other payment made was a small sum on account of interest in July 1909. The decree-holder applies for an order absolute for sale on the 3rd of August, 1909. Held, that the first three consecutive defaults were in 1905, 1906 and 1907, and that the decree-holder's application was in time applying art. 181 of the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. artiele 141,—Suit by reversioner.—By Bengal Regulation VII of 1832, s. 9 and Act XXI of 1850 the Legislature virtually set aside the provisions of the Hindu Law which penalize the renunciation of religion, or exclusion from caste. Where, therefore, in a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and son, the father was converted to Muhammadanism in 1845. Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that by the father's abandonment of Hinduism the son did not acquire any enforceable right to his father's share in the joint family property which he could either assert himself, or transmit to his heirs for enforcement, in a British Court of justice. Semble that whatever right the son acquired under the Hindu law to the share of his father came into existence on the conversion of the latter in 1845: and no suit could have been brought (even if Regulation VII of 1832 and Act XXI of 1850 had permitted it) to enforce that right after the lapse of 12 years from the time the cause of action arose (s. 1, clause 12 of Act XIV of 1859): and nothing in article 142 of Act IX of 1871, or in article 141 of Act XV of 1877 could revive a right which had already become barred. Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mothurmohun Goswami, I.L.R. 21 Cal. 8; L.R. 20 I.A. 183, referred to. After the death of the father (who survived the son) and their widows a compromise was in 1860 effected between the two daughters of the son on the one side and the grandson of the father on the other under which an 8½ anna share was allotted to the daughters and a 7½ anna share to the grandson. The 8½ anna share eventually on the death of the survivor of the two daughters in 1899, devolved upon the respondents, her sons. In a suit by them in 1904, for possession of the 7½ anna share allotted to the grandson, against the appellants who were his successors in title as transferees from him or his heirs, held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that the compromise of 1860 was a family arrangement by the members then claiming title to the property in settlement of their disputes, "each one relinquishing all claim in respect of all property in dispute other than that falling to his share and recognising the right of the others as they had previously asserted it to the portion allotted to them respectively." [See Lalla Oudh Beharee Lall v. Ranee Mewa Koonwar, 3 Agra H. C. 82, (84)]. The compromise was therefore binding on the respondents. The true test to apply to a transaction which is challenged by reversioners as an alienation is whether the alienee derives title from the holder of the limited interest or life-tenant, which in this case the predecessor in title of the appellants did not do: for the compromise here was "based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is." [See Rani Mewa Kunwar v. Rani Hulas Kunwar, L. R. 1 I. A. 167]. KHUNNI LAL v. GOBIND KRISENA NARAIN, 35 All. 356 ... 1333

Daughter's estate—Decree for possession of father's estate obtained by daughter—Right of daughter's sons to execute such decree.—The daughter of a separated Hindu obtained a decree for possession of her father's estate against certain trespassers. Endowment—Right of succession to sebaitship of temple belonging to Ballavacharya Gossains—Evidence of dedication—claim of persons incompetent to be sebaits (as being Bhats) of Balav temple disallowed as defeating the purpose for which the founder established the worship—Title—Proof of indepedent title to succession as sebait.—In a suit for possession and the right of sebaitship of a temple belonging to the Ballavacharya Gossains founded by one Muttuji, the maternal grandfather of the plaintiffs (appellants) the defendant (respondent) contended that the ordinary Hindu law was not applicable as alleged by the plaintiffs, and that daughter's sons were excluded by custom from succession. Held that, apart from positive testimony on the point, the performance of the worship of the idol in accordance with the rites of the sect for whose benefit it was held, might be treated as good evidence of dedication, and the ordinary rule of Hindu law relating to the descent of private property was not applicable. Held also that the rule that the heirs of the founder succeed to the sebaitship laid down in Gossamee Sree Greedharreejee v. Rumanlolljee Gossamee, was, as there implied, subject to the condition that the devolution in the ordinary line of descent is not inconsistent with or opposed to the purpose the founder had in view in establishing the worship. In the present case the appellants being Bhats, and not belonging to the Gossain kul were not competent to be sebaits of a Ballav temple where the rites were performed according to the ritual, which, it was clearly established they could not perform. To allow their claim would defeat the purpose for which the worship was established. Held further that the respondent had established an independent title of his own to the temple as being the nearest male relative of Muttuji both being descendants of two full brothers. The idol in the temple was brought from his temple at Nathdwara, and the worship founded by Muttuji was an off-shoot of the worship at Nathdwara. The temple was also built on land belonging to the Tekait respondent with the permission of his ancestor who held the office of Tekait at the time. He had therefore a clear title according to the customs and usages of the Ballav kul to the sebaitship of the temple. MOHAN LALJI v. GORI HAN LALJI MAHARAJ, 35 All. 283 ... 1217

Hindu widow—Powers of alienation possessed by a Hindu widow in respect of property of her husband—Transfer of debt secured by a mortgage.—A Hindu widow in possession as such of property which had been the property of her husband in his life-time can always alienate her life interest in such property and a transfer by her of the corpus of the property without legal necessity and not for a pious purpose is not void but only voidable at the instance of the reversioners. A Hindu window, without legal necessity transferred a mortgage debt and the security therefor, which had been the property of her late husband, to D, who thereafter sued to recover the debt by sale of the mortgaged property. Held that the transferee acquired all the rights which the widow had and could exercise during her life-time in respect of the mortgage, one of these being to recover the debt. Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi, 34 Cal. 329, DURGA KUNWAR v. MATU MAL, 35 All. 311 1287

The widow has full power to dispose of it during her life-time, and it is only when she manifests during her life-time a clear intention to treat it as an accretion to her husband's estate, or allows it at her death to remain undisposed of, that such property will become part of that estate. to the property is the same as that which governs the case of partible property so that a junior member of the family, who gets maintenance from the person holding the impartible estate, succeeds upon his death to the estate by right of survivorship. Whatever may be the powers of alienation of the holder of an impartible estate, the succession to it is governed not by the rule which applies to separate property but by rule of survivorship. Therefore the person who succeeds to the estate does not do so as the heir or legal representative of his predecessor and the estate cannot be regarded as the assets of the last previous holder. *Harpal Singh v. Inheritance—Impartible estate governed by the rule of primogeniture—Estate devised to widow of owner—Suit by reversioner—Compromise of suit by widow and reversioner—Descent of estate governed by the compromise and not by will. The owner of an impartible estate governed by the rule of primogeniture died leaving a will by which he gave an absolute estate to his widow against whom S, the next reversioner, brought a suit on the ground that the will was invalid and that he was entitled to possession of the estate. In that suit the parties came to a compromise, by the terms of which it was agreed that the widow should hold for her life the possession of "gaddinashin," paying S a monthly allowance, and that after her death S or "any representative of his who may be living at that time will be the absolute owner of all the movable and immovable properties and will occupy the gaddi." S predeceased the widow leaving no male issue and without having made any disposition by will otherwise of his interest in the estate. On the death of the widow in possession, the widow of S sued to recover the estate from members of her husband's family who had possession of it. Held, by the Judicial Committee (affirming the decision of the High Court) that the rights of the parties depended not on the will but on the compromise, the terms of which gave S a vested interest in the estate, which retained its character of impartibility, and on the death of S. descended not to his widow (the appellant) but to the respondent, his heir, according to the rule of primogeniture. Hindu family, and convert a joint tenancy into a tenancy in common, must depend on the facts of each case. A separation in mess and worship may be due to various causes, and yet the family may continue joint in estate. In this appeal it was held (affirming the decision of the court of the Judicial Commissioner) that on the evidence in, and under the circumstances of, the case and the conduct of the party alleging division of the family there had been no separation in 1901, and the appellant was consequently not entitled to mesne profits on that ground. He also claimed mesne profits on the ground of exclusion from the joint family, as he had not since 1901 received any share of the profits of the joint property. Held that although he had not received any of the profits of the joint estate, the evidence was clear that the appellant was offered an allowance from the profits of the joint property which he refused to accept as being inadequate, and that would not amount to exclusion. Mitakshara—Joint Hindu family—Liability of sons in respect of a mortgage executed by father—Exemption of son's interests—Subsequent suit against the sons—What plaintiffs are entitled to recover.—In 1892 a decree was passed on appeal for sale on a mortgage of joint family property against the father of the family. In 1896, the sons, who were not made parties to the original suit, obtained a decree exempting their shares in the family property. In 1897, the share of the father was sold and realized less than half the amount of the decree. In 1910 the mortgagees brought a suit against the sons to recover the balance of the mortgage debt after giving credit for the amount realized by sale in execution of the decree of 1892. Held, the suit was not barred, but that the plaintiffs could only recover the unsatisfied portion of the decree of 1892 together with future interest as allowed by that decree. They could not treat the suit as an ordinary mortgage suit, merely giving credit for the amount realized under the decree of 1892, nor could they claim interest at the contractual rate on the unpaid amount of the decree.

Joint Hindu family—Mortgage—Suit for cancellation of mortgage executed by managing member — Compromise — Liability of sons. One K, as head of a joint Hindu family, executed in 1905 a usufructuary mortgage of the family property, in which the widow of his deceased brother joined as a co-mortgagor. In 1907 the mortgagors sued for cancellation of this deed, but entered into a compromise with the mortgagee, upon which a decree was passed maintaining the mortgage, but in a modified form. The mortgagee thereafter instituted a suit for enforcement of the mortgage as settled by the compromise decree. Held that, in view of the fact that the courts below found that the compromise was genuine and for the benefit of the family, it was not open to the defendants to raise the question of the genuineness of the original mortgage, and that, whether or not the original mortgage was a genuine transaction, the compromise decree gave rise to a debt which was binding on the descendants of the original mortgagor K. Madan Lal v. Kishan Singh, I. In 1881, in substitution for this mortgage, each brother mortgaged to the same mortgagee a five biswa undivided share in Chauwar, and each brother also signed the mortgage executed by the other. In 1888 the family property was partitioned and the whole ten biswas of Chauwar fell to the share of one brother. Held on suit by the son of the mortgagee for sale that the plaintiff was entitled to bring to sale a five biswa share in Chauwar under the mortgage executed by the brother who had lost possession of the village and not merely to have recourse against such portion of the family property as he had taken in exchange therefor. Bijnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdry 1 I. Partition—Requisites for partition—Partition created by so-called will in life-time of father dividing family property among his sons and taking no share himself—Double share to eldest son—Unequal partition under alleged custom—Provision for forfeiture on mismanagement or bad behaviour—Conduct of parties after execution of document of partition.—By a document called a "will" dated the 26th of November. 1895, the father and head of a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law recorded a division of the ancestral family property amongst his three sons (giving himself no share but alloting a double share to his eldest son). The document recited that, "my three sons are at present fully qualified to conduct the business. Therefore in order to avoid a dispute after my death I have at present, while in a sound state of body and mind and of my own free will and accord, divided the property among my sons, heirs, as follows." Then followed the details of the division. There was provision that, "If I at any time come back from pilgrimages and find mismanagement or character of any one bad then I shall have power to cancel this will which shall be enforced from the date of its execution" and the document concluded as follows—"All the three sons were put in separate possession of the estate in the beginning of the year 1303 Fasli" (September 1885) "I have no other heir having a right besides those mentioned in this will. I have therefore executed this will in order that it may serve as evidence." Mutations of the various shares were subsequently made into the names of those to whom they were separately allotted, and the evidence showed that the division had been assented to, acquiesced in and acted upon by the sons up to 1905. In a suit brought in September, 1905, four years after the father's death, by the two younger sons for partition of the property, which they alleged to be joint and undivided, and of which they claimed to be entitled to two one-third shares, held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that the document of the 26th of November, 1885, was not a will but was intended to operate from its date and was in fact a family arrangement contemporaneously made and acted upon by all parties, the effect of which was, under the circumstances of the case, to create a partition of the joint ancestral property. There was nothing in the fact that the document was called a will which invalidated the partition, which was undoubtedly made in fact, and which was acted upon for ten years without any dispute or misunderstanding as to the respec-

Joint Hindu family—Presumptions as to property in the possession of members of a joint family.—Property in the possession of a joint Hindu family should be presumed to be joint family property until the contrary is shown, even though it may have been acquired in the name of a particular member of the family. The fact that property stands in the individual name of one or other member or a joint Hindu family does not of itself give rise to the presumption that it is the separate property of that member, Gurumurthi Reddi v. Gurammal, 32 Mad. 88, Shiu Golam Sing v. Baran Sing, 1 B. Mitakshara—Succession—Great-grandson of the grand-father—Grand son of the great-grandfather.—According to the Mitakshara law the three immediate descendants of the grandfather succeed in preference to the great-grandfather and his descendants, and the greatgrandson of the grand father is a preferential heir as against the grandson of the great-grandfather. Will—Construction of will—Bequest to testator's daughter-in-law after death of wife—Whether it conferred an absolute or only a life estate in the property.—The will of a Hindu testator after reciting that he had no male heir, and had already provided for his widowed daughter, stated :—"I have resolved that after my death my wife, legatee No. 1, shall remain in possession and enjoyment of all my property with all powers or authority like myself; and that after the death of my wife my daughter-in-law, widow of Raghuraj Singh, legatee No. 2, shall remain in possession and enjoyment of all the properties aforesaid like myself and legatee No. 1 * * * * * I therefore excute a will in favour of my daughter-in-law, so that on the demise of myself and my wife the estate and name of my ancestors may continue as before, and she in place of Raguraj Singh shall perform my funeral ceremonies and those of my wife according to the shashtras and the custom of the family, and then she shall have power to nominate any one whom she may think fit as 'heir' so that the name of the family may continue as formerly and now with honour." Held (affirming the decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner) that, on the true construction of the will, the word "heir" meant heir to the testator, and the daughter-in-law took (as did the wife) not an absolute interest, but only a life estate in the testator's property, which was therefore on her death not liable to attachment and sale under decrees against her representative. Partition—Abadi not formally divided but separate portions thereof taken possession of by the various owners—Agreement amongst owner—Rights of owners as to portions in possession of each.—A village was divided into three mahals, with the exception of the abadi, as to which it was found that it had not been divided between the mahals by demarcation on the village map, or on the spot, but the owners of the mahals had been in separate possession of portions of it. Held that the only possible inference from this finding was that the parties had agreed among themselves as to their possession of the abadi, and that, so long as the agreement continued, each party was entitled to use the portion in his possession in any way he pleased so long as such user or possession did not interfere with the user or possession of the owners of the other mahals. *Kumudini Mazumdar v. Execution of joint decree—Decree set aside as against one of several joint judgment-debtors against whom it had been ex-parte—Decree passed subsequently against the exempted party—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 108—Order on a former application whether res judicata.—A decree for sale on a mortgage was passed against several defendants jointly on the 25th August 1900 and made absolute on the 21st December, 1901. As against one defendant, however, the decree was ex-parte, but it was set aside as against her on appeal on the 11th March, 1902. Subsequently, a decree was passed on the merits against this defendant on the 15th August, 1902, and her appeal was dismissed by the High Court on the 16th November, 1904, and as against her that decree was made absolute on the 27th, November, 1905. An application for execution was made against all the defendants on the 21st December, 1905, based on the decrees of the 25th August, 1900, the 15th August, 1902, the 16th November, 1904, the 21st December, 1901, and the 27th November, 1905. The defendants filed an objection to the application on the 7th February 1906, alleging that they were no parties to the decrees of the 15th August, 1902, and the 27th November, 1905 and that as to the decrees of the 25th August, 1900, and the 21st December, 1901, they were time-barred. Held (affirming the decision of the High Court) that the decrees of the 25th August 1900, and the 16th November, 1904 were steps in granting the plaintiff the relief to which he was entitled. The latter decree supplemented and completed the former, and for the first time justified the plaintiff in applying for the joint execution of the decree. Time under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) began to run from the date of the latter decree, or rather from the date it was made absolute—the 27th November, 1905, and consequently the application was not barred. Held, also, that the plaintiff was not estopped in the present proceedings, by the order of the 27th November, 1905, dismissing his former application for execution of the 15th February, 1906, which was based on the decree of 15th August, 1902, alone; whereas the present application was based on the joint effect of the two orders absolute of the 21st December, 1901, and the 27th November, 1905, which were in effect one decree of the latter date. The applications therefore were different and the Agreement as to distribution of offerings—Construction agreement.—The members of a family of Maha Brahmans entered into an agreement amongst themselves whereby certain members of the family were to take the offerings made on certain days of the month, and the other members of the family the offerings made on the other days. Held by BANERJI and LYLE. JJ. (RICHARDS. C. J., dissenting) that such an agreement as above described would not prevent a person who wished to do so from making a special individual gift to a member of one branch of the family, even on a day which was appropriated by the agreement to the other branch, and that a claim for such gift by a member of the other branch was not maintainable. Per RICHARDS, C. J. If the offering was of a nature which was included in agreement between the parties the wishes of the donor could not regulate the rights of the parties, but the recipient of such an offering on a day which did not belong to his branch of the family was bound to account for it to the branch to which the day belonged. Doorga Pershad v. Budree, 6 N. L. R. 28 All. 508, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee on the evidence upheld that decision on the question whether the defendant' Maharaj, was a minor at the time he signed the mortgage and said:—"Having found as a fact that Maharaj Singh was a minor," at that time "it is not necessary for their Lordships to consider any other issues. This suit has been brought on the mortgage deed of the 28th of October, 1892, by the assignee of that mortgage, and as their Lordships have held that the mortgage was not made by Sheoraj Singh as the manager of the family or in any respect as representing Maharaj Singh, and as Maharaj Singh was then a minor, the mortgage deed as against him and his interest in the estate was not merely voidable, it was void and of no effect and must be regarded as a mortgage deed to which he was not even an assenting party, and as a mortgage deed which did not affect him or his interest in the estate. P.* had, their Lordships found, been introduced into the suits of 1899 by the respondent as the guardian or next friend of the appellants to advance the interests of the respondent and to defeat the interests of the appellants, which conflicted with those of the respondent: he had throughout acted under the directions and on behalf of the respondent and in his interest and contrary to the interest of the appellants, and the respondent had taken advantage of his position to the detriment of the appellants. Mortgage.

Construction of document—Liability for deficiency in interest whether personal merely or a charge on the mortgaged property.—A mortgage deed provided that the mortgagee should take possession of the mortgaged property and out of the rents and profits pay the Government revenue and appropriate Rs. 132 per annum on account of interest at the rate of 11 annas per cent. permensem. It further provided that should the amount of profits calculated on the basis of the patwari's accounts, be found insufficient to cover the whole amount payable for interest, the deficiency would be made good by the mortgagor together with interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem. Held that deficiency in the stipulated interest was realizable as well from the mortgaged property as from the mortgagor personally. Muhammad Husain v. Sheodarshan Das, 4 A. Mortagage of sir land—Purchase of proprietary rights by mortgage—Suit for redemption—Amount payable by mortgagor.—After a usufructuary mortgage of certain sir lands the mortgagee at an auction sale in execution of a simple money decree purchased the proprietary rights in the mortgaged property, the mortgagor becoming an ex-proprietary tenant. On a suit for redemption being brought, held that the mortgagee having himself broken up the integrity of his security, could not be permitted to cast the whole burden of the debt upon the ex-proprietary rights. Bisheshar Dial v. Ram Sarup, I. Prior and subsequent mortgagees—Decree obtained on a prior mortgage satisfied by execution of a fresh mortgage in favour of decree-holder—Priority over an intermediate mortgage.—A decree for sale upon a mortgage of 1895 was obtained in 1901. In 1903 the decree-holder accepted in satisfaction of the decree a sale deed of a certain portion of the mortgaged property, but this adjustment was never certified to the court. Subsequently the decree was put into execution and a sale was ordered, but before it was carried out the parties came to terms, and the judgment-debtor executed a fresh mortgage to secure the decretal amounts. This was in May 1904. Meanwhile, in April 1904, another mortgage had been executed by the judgment-debtor. Held that the mortgage of May 1904, being in satisfaction of the earlier mortgage of 1895 had priority over that of April 1904. Kanhaiya Lal v. Chedda Singh 7. Redemption—Right to redeem one of two properties separately mortgaged.—Two persons mortgaged certain property in 1879. In 1883 one of the mortgagors executed a mortgage comprising in part property subject to the mortgage of 1879 and in part other property in favour of the same mortgagee. This latter mortgage contained a stipulation that the mortgagor would redeem it before redeeming the mortgage of 1879. Certain property comprised in the first mortgage, but not in the second, was sold, and the purchasers sued for redemption of that mortgage alone. Held that in the circumstances they were not precluded by the covenant in the second mortgage from redeeming the first. Redemption—Bengal Regulation No. XV of 1793, s. 10—"Redeemed," meaning of—Jurisdiction—Act No. XII of 1887 (Bengal, N.-W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act) s. 19—Competence of Court to pass a decree for an amount exceeding the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction.—Held that the word " redeemed " as used in s. 10 of Regulation XV of 1793, was not used in the sense that the mortgage had been redeemed in the full sense of that word, that is, satisfied and possession given to the mortgagor. So long, therefore, as the property remains in the hands of the mortgagee, the mortgagor can bring a suit for redemption even if the mortgage had been satisfied over 12 years before suit. Held, also, that where a suit as filed is within the pecuniary jurisdiction of a court, the jurisdiction of the court is not ousted by the subsequent discovery that a sum is in fact due to the plaintiff exceeding the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction. Madho Das v. Ramji Patak, I. Construction of document—"Muakhiza"—Act No. IV of 1882(Transfer of Property Act), Ss. 58, 100.—A deed the basis of a suit for sale as on a mortgage opened with a recital that the executant had borrowed a sum of money, followed by a promise to pay the amount with interest at 2 per cent per month within a certain time and then provided; "muakhiza asl o sud ta yom-ul-wasul upar (description of the share) haqiyat min muqir..... qaim rahega .....lihaza.....batarik tamassuk muhakhiza-i-jadad ka likhaya." Held that this deed could not be construed as a mortgage. Decree on mortgage—Decree set aside as against one mortgagor—Second suit to recover proportionate share of the debt maintainable.—A mortgagor died leaving him surviving a brother, two daughters and an illegitimate son. The four sons of the brother took an assignment of the mortgage from the mortgagee and subsequently brought a suit for sale of the mortgaged property against the children of the mortgagor, and inasmuch as they were themselves owners of part of the mortgaged property, framed their suit as one for the recovery of specific shares of the mortgage money from the portions of the property in the possession of each of the defendants. They obtained in this suit an ex-parte decree, which, however, was set aside as against one of the daughters upon the ground that she was a minor and not properly represented therein. Held that the plaintiffs were not precluded from maintaining a fresh suit against this defendant for the recovery of a share in the mortgage debt proportionate to her share in the property. Estoppel—Power of representatives of mortgagor to question validity of mortgage—Adverse possession—Possession adverse to mortgagor not necessarily adverse to mortgagee.—Held that, although the representatives of a mortgagor cannot as such question the validity of the mortgage, it may be open to them as mutawallis to plead that the property was waqf and that the mortgage of it was void. Gulzar Ali v. Fida Ali, I. L. Non-payment of greater part of mortgage money—Mortgagee allowed to redeem before expiry of term of mortgage.—Certain property was mortgaged by way of conditional sale for Rs. 599-15-0 for ten years. Of the mortgage money Rs. 50-15-0 only were paid, and the balance was left with the mortgagees for payment to prior incumbrancers. The mortgagees did not pay off the prior incumbrancers, and, the mortgagor having meanwhile sold the mortgaged property, his assignees sued for redemption of the mortgage before the expiry of ten years. Held that on equitable grounds, the defendants not having performed what was a most essential part of the contract, the plaintiffs ought to be allowed to redeem before the expiration of the period of ten years. CHHOTKU RAI v. BALDEO SHUKUL, 34 All. 659 ... 999

Prior and subsequent incumbrancers—Third mortgagee paying off first mortgage and claiming priority as against second mortgagee —Presumption as to intention of third mortgagee.—Where a mortgagee pays off prior incumbances on the mortgaged property it is to be presumed that he does so with the intention of keeping these incumbrances alive and using them as a shield should occasion arise; and he can so use them as much when he is a plaintiff suing for sale as when he is a defendant to an intermediate or subsquent mortgagee's suit. If the payment is made in the form of leaving part of the money with the mortgagee to be paid to the prior mortgagees, the subsequent mortgagee does not thereby become the agent of the mortgagor for the purpose of paying off the prior mortgages. Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukhdas I. Prior and subsequent mortgages—Suit by first mortgagee without impleading second—Decree and sale—Subsequent suit by second mortgagee against purchase under decree in first suit—Plaintiff held bound to redeem first mortgagee.—The plaintiff brought his suit for sale of certain property in satisfaction of a mortgage of the year 1877, which was a renewal of a mortgage of 1875. The defendants were purchasers at a sale in execution of a decree on a mortgage which bore a later date in 1875 than the plaintiff's first mortgage, but was a renewal of a previous mortgage of 1869. To the suit in which this decree had been passed the plaintiff had not been made a party. The defendants had been in possession of the property so purchased by them for some twenty years. Held, that the plaintiff had no absolute right to bring the property to sale in satisfaction of his mortgage subject to the mortgage of 1869, and that in in the circumstances he ought to redeem that mortgage before bringing the property to sale. Mata Din Kasodhan v. Kazim Husain, I. Redemption—Subsequent agreement qualifying right to redeem—Loss of deed—Onus of proving terms of mortgage—Act No. I of 1862 (Oudh Estates Act), s. 6—Limitation—Compromise barring right to redemption.—There is nothing in law to prevent the parties to a mortgage from coming to a subsequent arrangement qualifing the right to redeem.—In this case the mortgage which it was sought to redeem was dated in 1846, and in 1870, the mortgagors had, in consideration of certain additional benefit reserved to them under a compromise, agreed to subject their right of redemption to certain conditions. The deed having been lost, the onus was on the plaintiffs to prove the terms of the mortgage, so as to show that the suit was not barred by s. 6 of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869) [see Raja Kishen Dutt Ram Panday v. Narendar Bahadoor Singh, L. R. 3 I. A. 85], which onus he was found unable to discharge.—Held (affirming the decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh) that the plaintiffs were not in any case entitled to redeem as long as there was no breach by the defendants of the covenants contained in the compromise. session—Separation of member of joint Hindu family and purchase of property with self-acquired means—Possession adverse to mortgagors.—These were cross appeals from the decision of the High Court in Muzaffar Ali Khan v. Parbati, I. L. R. 29 All. 640. The plaintiffs relied on a usufructuary mortgage of 1846 and sued for redemption of the property in suit, two shares in a village called Lohari. The case of the defendants was that they were in possession not under the mortgage but under sales of the 27th May, 1853, and the 20th of March 1854, respectively, by which the equity of redemption in the shares mortgaged in 1846 had passed to those through whom they claimed title, and they pleaded adverse possession. Both the lower courts had upheld the later sale and dismissed the suit as to that share in Lohari. As to the earlier sale the courts below had differed, the first court upholding it, and the High Court deciding in favour of the plaintiffs. On appeals by both parties, it was immaterial, in the view taken by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of that sale (27th May, 1853) by what title Ashraf unnissa, one of the widows of the mortgagor, obtained the share she took, and whether or not she had a daughter who survived him. Her share was certainly transferred by the sale to Baldeo Sahai, who, though he was the grandson of one of the mortgagees and the son of the other, with both of whom he had lived as a member of a joint Hindu family, had, according to reliable evidence, separated from them and at the time of the sale was carring on, with a nucleus of property derived from his grandmother, a money-lending business from the profits of which he was enabled to purchase, with self acquired funds, the share in Lohari from Ashraf-un-nissa, who purported to sell it to him as a person who was not a mortgagee under the mortgage of 1846; and he was therefore not precluded from setting up a title by adverse possession, which it was conclusive in the evidence he had held for more than 50 years. Their Lordships therefore, while affirming the decision of the courts below as to the later sale, reversed the decision of the High Court as to the earlier sale, and upheld that transaction also. Mortgage.—(Contd.). PAGE

Interest—Construction of document—Mortgage by conditional sale with no provision for post diem *interest—*Post diem interest not allowed.—A mortgage executed in 1869 provided for the payment of the sum Rs. 300 with interest at Rs. 1-8 per mensem in one lump sum upon a certain specified date four years from the date of the mortgage. It further provided that, if the money was not paid upon that date, the property mortgaged should become the absolute property of the mortgagee. There was no stipulation of any kind as to the payment of interest after the date fixed. Held that the mortgagee was not entitled to post diem interest. Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur, 19 All. 39, distinguished. Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh, 19 Cal. 19, and Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh, 24 Cal. 699, followed. Redemption—Construction of mortgage as to the terms of redemption—Mortgage and lease to mortgagor contemporaneously granted—Mortgage executed before Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) came into force—Mortgagee's security reduced by portion of property being withdrawn—Section 66 (a) of Transfer of Property Act—Right of mortgagee to compensation.—The plaintiff (respondent) mortgaged to the defendant (appellant) certain property by a deed, dated the 25th of August 1880, for Rs. 70,000 for eight years. On the 29th of August (and so practically contemporaneously with the mortgage) a lease of the mortgaged property was executed by the mortgagee in favour of the mortgagor at an annual rent Rs. 4,200, which represented interest on the mortgage debt at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The mortgage contained a clause that "it is agreed by mutual consent of the parties that the profits of the property mortgaged shall belong to the mortgagee in lieu of the interest on the mortgage money, and I, the mortgagor, shall have no claim for mesne profits. The mortgagee also shall have no right to claim interest on the mortgage money advanced by him." The lease, after reciting the mortgage, referred to a provision in the latter that the mortgagor should be entitled to sell a certain portion of the mortgaged property on condition that he handed over the whole of the proceeds of the sale to the mortgagee in payment of the mortgage debt, and provided that "under the condition whatever sum of money the mortgagor should pay to the mortgagee in a lump sum should be credited and set off against the rent payable under the lease with interest at 8 annas per cent. per mensem." Subsequently three further charges were tacked on to the mortgage, the latest of which was dated the 13th December 1882. In June 1888, the mortgagor was in arrear with his rent and the mortgagee brought a suit against him on which the mortgagor gave up possession of the property to the mortgagee. In a suit for redemption (the right to redeem not being disputed), held that the mortgagee was entitled under the terms of the mortgage to appropriate the profits of the mortgaged property in lieu of the interest on the mortgage money not paid by the mortgagor. Evidence of preliminary negotiations and previous conversations were not admissible to contradict or vary the terms of the mortgage (Evidence Act, section 92.) Held also that the mortgage and the lease were both parts of one and the same transaction. But there was no inconsistency between the two instruments nor would there have been any inconsistencey if the mortgage itself had contained a provision for granting a lease on the terms upon which the lease was actually granted. Held further that the original mortgage having been executed before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation, that Act was not applicable, notwithstanding that one of the further charges was executed subsequently to that date. Whatever might be the construction of s. 65 (a) of that Act (which was cited in support of the mortgagee's claim) he was not on the evidence and under the circumstances of the present case entitled to compensation for any loss or damage occasioned by his security being diminished owing to a portion of the mortgaged property being successfully claimed from the mortgagor. Dower—Interst—Liability of widow in possession to account for profits.—Held by the Full Bench that a Muhammadan widow who has been put in possession by her husband, of his estate in lieu of her dower debt, is entitled, when called upon by her husband's heirs other than herself, to account for rents and profits received by her during the time of her possession, to claim interest at a reasenable rate upon her dower debt. A Muhammadan made over to his wife, to whom a dower of Rs. 1,25,000 was due, certain property. In the deed of transfer it was stipulated (1) that the wife was to take possession of the property in lieu of her dower and enjoy the usufruct; (2) that the property was to revert to the husband if the wife predeceased him, the dower debt being deemed to have been discharged; (3) that if the husband predeceased the wife the property was to become hers absolutely. Held that the transaction was neither a mortgage by conditional sale nor a mahabat, but the wife obtained a right to enjoy the usufruct during her husband's lifetime, with the possibility of the interest developing into full ownership if the husband predeceased her. Shias—Dispute between husband and wife as to wife's dower—Arbitration—Awards transferring property of husband to wife—Further conveyance unnecessary.—A Muhammadan husband and wife of the Shia persuasion referred a dispute relating to the wife's dower to arbitrators, who, under a registered award, transferred the absolute ownership of the husband's property in praesenti to the wife, reserved possession of it to the husband for life with control over the income, and provided that, in the event of the wife predeceasing the husband, he should continue in possession for life, while in the event of the husband dying before the wife, she should be owner and the heirs of the husband could not interfere. Mutation of names followed in favour of the wife, who executed a mukhtarnama in favour of her husband for the management of the property conveyed to her under the award:—Held, that the award was sufficient to transfer the ownership of the property covered by it in praesenti to the wife, and no conveyance need have been executed. Ram Bakhsh v. Moghlani Khanam, I. Suit for dower—Compromise—Family arrangement—Transfer of expectancy—Act No. IV of 1882 (Transefr of Property Act), s. 6(a).—A Muhammadan wife brought a suit for dower against her husband which resulted in a compromise, the terms being that the wife was given possession of some property in lieu of her dower and the husband retained possession of some other property for life, which life interest in case of urgent necessity he was authorized to sell or hypothecate, and it was agreed that on the death of the wife the persons who should be the heirs of both would be the owners of the properties. The wife predeceased her husband, who then transferred certain properties in his own right and as heir of his wife, held that the compromise was in the nature of a family settlement under which the husband was not competent to dispose of more than the life interest in certain property therein named. The relinquishment by the husband of his right to succeed as heir to his wife was not obnoxious to the prohibition contained in s. 6(a) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1889. Musammat Hurmat-ul-nissa Begam v. Allahdia Khan, 17 W.R. 108, Shams-un-din Ghulam

II, Arts.* 44 and 144.—A Muhammadan testator by his will left all his property to his four grandsons (brothers), but did not expressly appoint any executors of his will or guardians of such of his grand-children as might be minors at his death, nor was there in the will any intention to entrust the administration of the property to any particular individuals. The testator died in 1887; and on the 15th of the June, 1889, the three elder grandsons on their own behalf, and purporting to act also as the guardians of the fourth grandson, the respondent (plaintiff) then a minor, sold some of the property to the appellant (defendant). The appellant was a mortgagee of two villages on the estate under two mortgages executed by the testator on the 2nd of December, 1885, and the 7th of August, 1886 for ten years and seven years respectively; and the effect of the sale had been to pay off the later mortgage on the smaller village, and other debts, by selling the larger village to the mortgagee. The respondent attained his majority in 1892 or 1893, and treating the sale of the 15th June, 1889, as a nullity, and mortgage as still subsisting, he tendered to the appellant the amount of mortgage money necessary to redeem the larger village, and on the appellant refusing to accept it, brought a suit for redemption on the 14th of September, 1905. Held that the elder brothers were not authorized either by the will or by the Muhammadan law to act as guardians of the minor, and he was entitled on attaining his majority to treat the transaction of the 15th of June, 1889, as being void as against him. Held, also, that the possession of the appellant did not become adverse to the respondent until the expiry of the term of the mortgage of 1885 namely, the 2nd of December, 1885, and therefore the suit was not barred by the 12 years period provided by Art. 144 of sch. Parda-nashin lady.

Execution of deed depriving herself of nearly all her preperty—Burden of proof—Requisites to be proved—Concurrent findings on facts that burden had not been discharged—First court's decision on that point affirmed by appellate court—Finding sufficient to dispose of case.—A para-nashin lady, separated from her husband, unable to read or write, and without independent legal advice, created an endowment of practically her whole property by a deed of which she appointed the appellants (plaintiffs) trustees. In a suit for a declaration that the property was waqf and for possession of it. Held that, as they relied upon the deed, the onus was on the appellants to show that the nature and effect of it had, at the time of its execution, been explained to and understood by the executant. Shambati Koeri v. Jago Bibi, I. L. R. 29 Cal. 749; L. R. 29 I. A. 127, followed. Upon the question whether that onus had been discharged, the appellate court in India affirmed the decision of the first court to the effect that it had not, but nevertheless allowed an appeal to His Majesty in Council under s. 596 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1822) on the ground that the judgment of the lower court had not been wholly affirmed. Held that the findings of the courts below amounted to concurrent findings of fact which could not be disturbed on appeal, and there being no "substantial question of law" the appeal must be dismissed. Karuppanan Servai v. Srinivasan Chetti, I. where they are so entrusted and empowered they are entitled as the sole managers of the family business to make in their own names contracts in the course of that business, and to maintain suits brought to enforce those contracts without joining in the suit with them either as plaintiffs or defendants the other members of the family. Arunachala Pillai v. Vythialinga Mudaliyar, I. L. R. 6 Mad. 27, approved. K. P. Kanna Pisharody v. V. M. Narayanan Somayajipad, I. L. R. 3 Mad. 234, Ramsebuk v. Ramlal Koondoo, I. L. R. 6 Cal. 815, Imam-ud-din v. Liladhar, I. L. R. 14 All. 524; and Alagappa Chetti v. Vallian Chetti, I. L. R. 18 Mad. 33 distinguished. In this case the original plaintiffs were the managing members of a joint family business of money-lending, entrusted with and regularly exercising the power of doing everything necessary to carry on the business. In the course of such business they contracted in their own names with the defendants for a loan, and on the accounts a balance was struck between the parties on the 9th August 1901. In a suit brought by the managing members on the 3rd June 1904, and therefore within the period of limitation, to recover the amount due, the other members of the family were, on an objection by the defendants that the suit was improperly constituted, joined as plaintiffs on the 22nd August 1904, after the period of limitation for the suit had expired, and the defence was set up that under s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the whole suit was barred. Held (reversing the decision of the High Court) that the suit as orginally brought was properly constituted: that the members of the family subsequently added were unnecessary parties: and that the suit was consequently not barred. Suit for cancellation of father's will brought by daughters—Plea of custom excluding daughters from inheritance—Custom not allowed to be raised in this suit.—On suit by the daughters of the testator for a declaration that a will alleged to have been executed by their father was a false and fraudulent document and not binding on them, the defendants set up a custom by virtue of which the daughters, but not apparently daughters' sons, were excluded from inheritance to their father's property. Held, that, as member of their father's family, the daughters, who, but for the will, on the death of their mother, would take the property of their father, had a cause of action which entitled them to bring the suit, and the issue whether or not a custom existed excluding them from inheritance was not a fit and proper issue to be determined in the present suit. Pre-emption.

Claim of pre-emptor based on purchase by him of another share in the same mahal—Claim made before confirmation of sale in plaintiff's favour—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 316.—Held with reference to s. 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, that a purchaser at auction sale in execution of a decree of a share in zamindari property does not become a co-sharer in the mahal, in which such property is situate until the sale has been confirmed in his favour. Muhammadan Law—Shafi-i-sharik—Shafi-i-khalit—Shafi-i-jar—Effect of perfect partition.—When a mahal has been perfectly partitioned, no right of pre-emption under the Muhammadan law subsists in favour of the owner of one of the new mahals in respect of the other new mahal or any portion of it on the ground of vicinage alone. Mahadeo Singh v. Mussamut Zeenut-un-nissa, 11 W.R. C.R. 169, Sheikh Mohamed Hossein v. Shaw Mohsin Ali, 6 B. L. R. 41, and Abdul Rahim Khan v. Kharag Singh, I. L. R. 15 All. 104, referred to. Nor will the fact that a village chaupal has remained undivided give the owner of either of the new mahals a right of pre-emption against the owner of the other as a shafi-i-khalit. Rahtab Singh v. Tahal Misser, 10 W.R. Pre-emption—(Contd.). PAGE

Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—Contract or custom—Presumption in absence of evidence that the record is one of custom.—Where it is not apparent, either from the language of the wajib-ul-arz itself or from other evidence, that the pre-emption clause of a wajib-ul-arz is merely the record of a new contract between the co-sharer, the presumption is that it is the record of a pre-existing custom. Majidan Bibi v. Shaikh Hryatan, Weekly Notes 1897, p. 3, followed. The pre-emptive clause of a wajib-ul-arz was headed "Relating to the right of pre-emption" and ran as follows:—"If a co-sharer has to sell and mortgage his haqiat—then at the time of transfer it will be incumbent that he should after giving information sell and mortgage for a proper price, &c., &c." Held that this in the absence of evidence to the contrary indicated a pre-existing custom of pre-emption rather than a contract. BHIM SEN v. MOTI RAM, 33 All. 85 ... 57

Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—"Intiqal" Perpetual lease.—Held that the word "intiqal" used in the pre-emptive clause of wajib-ul-arz was wide enough to include a perpetual lease. Jagdam Sahai v. Mahabir Prasad, I.L.R. 28 All. 60, and Ahamad Ali Khan v. Ahmad, I. N. W. P. H. C. Rep. 101, referred to. LALJI MISR v. JAGGU TEWARI, 33 All. 104 ... 70

Wajib-ul-arz—Custom or contract—Construction of document—Regulation—VII of 1882.—In a suit for pre-emption, wajib-ul-arz of 1839 and 1869, were produced. The preamble to the former was worded thus:—"Having well understood the following matters we willingly accept them." It then dealt with the right of pre-emption in the following terms:—"Mode of sale or transfer of whole or part of share," giving the right of pre-emption to co-sharers as against strangers, and concluded with the words; "therefore we write this iqrarnama so that it may be of use in future." The wajib-ul-arz of 1869 provided that "near co-sharers and other pattidars would have the right of pre-emption. Preference amongst them would be according to degrees of nearness":—Held, (STANLEY, C. J. dissenting) that the wajib-ul-arzes contained the record of custom and not of contract. Per STALNEY, C. J.:—A custom to be binding must be unaltered, uniform, constant and definite. If the settlement of 1833 recorded a custom, then the co-sharers in the village at the time of the later settlement of 1869 must be deemed to have abrogated it and to have adopted by agreement the right of pre-emption which it recorded in the later wajib-ul-arz as more suitable to the then existing conditions. The variance in the rights as defined in two wajib-ul-arzes leads to the conclusion that the right recorded in 1869, cannot be treated as a right existing by custom. Per KNOX and CHAMIER, JJ.:—The word iqrar does not necessarily mean a contract. It means ratification or assent. RETURAJI DUBAIN v. PAHALWAN BHAGAT, 33 All. 196 ... 132 patti in the khalisa wished to sell his share, he would do so paying due respect to his own pre-emptor (apna shafi), and if the latter refused and all the other pre-emptors of the village (aur sab shafian deh) refused then he might sell to a stranger. Held, that the expression apna shafi connoted nearness in space and not a blood-relationship, and therefore where the vendor and pre-emptor were co-sharers in the same patti, the vendee being a co-sharer in a different patti, the co-sharers in the same patti had a preferential right. LAKHAN SINGH v. BISHAN NATH, 33 All. 299 ... 202

Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—Partition of village—New wajib-ul-arzes prepared after partition.—The wajib-ul-arz of a village before partition provided for pre-emption in the following way :—" Rights of co-sharers as among themselves on the basis of custom or agreement. The custom of pre-emption obtains. In case of sale of property by a co-sharer, another co-sharer in the mauza can bring a suit for pre-emption. If he offers a low price, then the vendor can sell the property to a stranger." The village was divided by perfect partition into three mahals. New wajib-ul-arzes were drawn up after partition, and the condition as to pre-emption in each ran as follows :—" Rights of co-sharers inter se based on custom or agreement. The custom of pre-emption prevails. In case one co-sharer sells his share (hakiat), another co-sharer in the village (hissadar sharik mauza) can claim pre-emption. If he offers a smaller price the seller can sell it to a stranger." The plaintiff pre-emptor was a co-sharer in a different mahal from that in which the property sold was situate. The vendee was a stranger to the village. The entire body of co-sharers in the village were Mubammadans of the same stock, and continued so up to the time of partition. Held, upon a construction of the language of the wajib-ul-arz and the circumstances of the case that the pre-emptor must succeed as against the stranger vendee notwithstanding that a partition had taken place. Janki v. Ram Partab Singh, I. L. R, 28 All., 286, referred to. CHEPHUR v. ABDUL HAKIM, 33 All. 296 ... 199

Wajib-ul-arz - Custom—Evidence—Nature of evidence required to establish a custom of pre-emption.—The plaintiffs claimed a right based upon contract or custom, to pre-empt a sale of zamindari property. The property was situate in one of the three mahals of a village named Suram. The plaintiffs were not co-sharers with the vendors in that mahal ; the vendees were strangers. In 1873 the village Suram consisted of a single mahal, and the village wajib-ul-arz of that date contained the following reference to pre-emption:—"In future if any pattidar wishes to transfer his share by sale * * * to a stranger * * * first, the sharers in the patti khas, then pattidars in the thok, and then digar pattidaran deh shall have a right to purchase." In 1883 perfect partition took place, and the village was divided into three separate mahals. A fresh wajib-ul-arz was drawn up for each of the new mahals but in each the provisions regarding pre-emption were copied verbatim from the wajib-ul-arz of 1873. Held, (1) that the plaintiffs had failed to establish any right of pre-emption based on contract; (2) that the oral evidence was worthless as supporting the custom set up by the plaintiffs; and (3) that the evidence afforded by the wajib-ul-arz of 1873 and 1883 was quite insufficient to establish the right claimed by the plaintiffs, if such right was to be regarded as one based on an alleged custom. Dalganjan Singh v. Kalka Singh, I. L. R. 22 All. 1, referred to: Auseri Lal v. Ram Bhajan Lal, I. L. R. 27 All. 602, and Sardar Singh v. Ijaz Husain Khan, I. L. R. 28 All. 614, discussed. Wajib-ul-arz—Notice of sale given to member of a joint Hindu family—Effect of such notice—Effect of conditional reply disputing amount of alleged consideration.—Held that a person having a right of pre-emption does not lose it by refusing to purchase the property at the price at which it is offered to him, because he believes that such price is in excess of the real price, where such belief is entertained and expressed in good faith. Where the pre-emptor and his brothers were members of a joint Hindu family and the vendor addressed a notice to him and his brothers jointly, to which the pre-emptor's brother sent a reply. Held that the plaintiff pre-emptor was entitled to claim the benefit of this reply as it had been sent by himself. Lajja Prasad v. Debi Prasad, I. L. R. 3 All. 236, Amir Chand v. Ishar Das, Weekly Notes, 1882, p. 136, Bholi Bibi v. Fahima Bibi, Weekly Notes, 1882, p. 46, and Karim Bakhsh v. Khuda Bakhsh, I. L. Conditional decree—Decretal amount deposited in court—Decree enhanced in appeal—Additional payment made not covering amount withdrawn as costs.—A successful plaintiff pre-emptor deposited in court the amount of the decree in his favour, but subsequently withdrew therefrom the amount of the costs decreed in his favour. On the amount payable being enhanced on appeal he paid into Court the difference between the original and appellate decrees. Held that the decree had been fully complied with. Gopal Saran v. Ishri, I. Muhammadan Law—Demand made "on the premises"—Demand made in the abadi which was part of the premises sold.—Where a person claiming pre-emption in respect of a certain zamindari share prove that he had made the demand with witnesses while sitting on his chabutra in the abadi, which formed part of the premises sold, it was held that the demand of pre-emption was a good demand made "on the premises" within the meaning of the Muhammadan law. Kulsum Bibi v. Fakir Mukammad Khan, I. Muhammadan law—Talab-i-mawasibat.—Where a person immediately on hearing of the sale of a house exclaimed "mera haq shafa hai" and without any delay took the price and brought it to the vendee and claimed the house, held that the expression used by him coupled with the circumstances constituted a sufficient first demand. Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan v. Muhammad Khan, 8 A. Custom—Wajib-ul-arz—Owner of isolated revenue-free plots—Evidence of custom.—The pre-emptive clause of a wajib-ul-arz contained the following provision:—"If the owner of a share wish to sell it, he shall do so first to his near relation, who may be a co-sharer in the zamindari, and in case of his refusal to anyone he likes." Held that this by itself was not sufficient evidence of a custom giving owners of isolated revenue-free plots of land in the village a right to pre-empt. MAWASI v. MUL CHAND, 34 All. 434 ... 844

Wajib-ul-arz—Custom—Effect of joining in the purchase a co-sharer having an inferior right.—The vendee in a suit for pre-emption having equal rights with the pre-emptor disables himself from resisting a suit for pre-emption as much by associating with himself in the purchase another co-sharer whose rights are inferior to those of the pre-emptor as by associating with himself a stranger. (Pre-mortgage)—Joint usufructuary mortgage—Further simple mortgage on share of one mortgagor in favour of same mortgagee—What amount the claimants of the right to pre-mortgage are liable to pay.—Certain persons made a joint usufructuary mortgage of their property. On the same day one of them executed a deed by way of a further charge, or simple mortgage, of his share in favour of the same mortgagee. In a suit for pre-mortgage, of his share in this second mortgagor it was held that the plaintiffs were not liable to pay the sum secured by the deed of further charge, which was a separate and independent transaction, but were entitled to pre-mortgage upon paying such amount of the mortgage debt as was proportionate to the share of the said mortgagor. Custom—Evidence—Sales to strangers unchallenged as evidence negativing custom—Mode in which such sales should be proved.—Where the court is trying the issue of the existence or non-existence of a custom of pre-emption, every instance of a sale to a stranger is material evidence which the court ought to take into consideration and weigh when coming to a conclusion on the issue. But a mere vague statement that there had been sales to strangers without the production of the sale deeds or certified copies thereof and without some further details of the sale is not sufficient to prove sales to strangers. Sewak Singh v. Girja Pande, 2 A. the city of Benares subject to a customary right of pre-emption was sold for Rs. 1,150. The vendee resold it shortly afterwards to the defendant for Rs. 4,000. Held on suit brought to pre-empt the property at the original price of Rs. 1,150, that the second sale was subject to the right of pre-emption and the pre-emptor was only bound to pre-empt the first sale, making the subsequent vendee a party to the suit so as to bind him by the proceedings. Kamta Prasad v. Mohan Bhagat, I. Taluqdar.
Settlement of Oudh—Taluqdar settled with on terms as to which no evidence could be given—Second summary settlement—Villages included in taluqdar's estate and not recovered by payment of money due on account of them—Trustee or lien-holder—Redemption barred by Act No. I of 1869, *s.*6—Adverse possession.—This appeal related to certain villages in Oudh which belonged prior to the annexation of that Province to the widow of the predecessor in title of the appellants, and were, under some arrangement of the exact nature of which there was no evidence, included in the estate of the ancestor of the respondent, a taluqdar, in whose possession they were found at the settlement in 1859. The widow at that time applied as owner for the settlement of the villages. Her claim was resisted by the agent of the taluqdar on the ground that he was entitled to possession until sums paid by him on account of the villages were paid off; and the settlement was made "in accordance with possession," the widow being directed by the settlement officer to proceed by separate application to get the villages released by payment of the money due by her; but she took no steps to get the property released: and when in 1867 she applied for regular settlement of the villages her claim was dismissed on 31st October 1868, on the ground that they were included in the sanad granted by Government to the taluqdar. In a suit brought in 1905 by representatives of the widow for possession of a share of the property on the ground that the settlement proceedings in 1859 constituted the taluqdar either a mortgagee or a trustee on behalf of the widow it was admitted that the claim for redemption was barred by s. 6 of Act No. I of 1869. Held (upholding the decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner) that there was no warrant for the contention that the correlative obligation that lay on the taluqdar to release the villages on payment of the money due on account of them created a trust or constituted him a trustee for the widow, who took no steps to comply with directions of the settlement officer, and allowed the taluqdar to remain in possession and set up a distinctly adverse title in 1867, when she applied for regular settlement. Hasan Jafar v. Muhammad Askari, I. Vendor and purchaser.

Sale to raise funds for litigation—Transfer whilst vendor was out of possession—Agreement depending on success of litigation—Transfer of undivided share in joint ancestral property—Interest in property giving right to sue—Vendee and provider of funds made co-plaintiffs.—The original plaintiffs in the two suits out of which these appeals arose were in one suit the sons, and in the other the grandson of the heads and managers of two distinct joint Hindu families, owners of an estate in Oudh, by whom alienations of the joint ancestral property had been made in favour of the appellant, whom they sued in ejectment to set aside those alienations on the ground that the managing members had no power to make them. As they required funds to enable them to prosecute the suits, they entered into agreements with a third person (who was made a co-plaintiff in the suits and was now respondent) to the effect that "in the share of each of them in the property he will be a co-sharer of a one-half share, and the remaining one-half share will, belong to us . . . He will bear the entire expenses in connexion with the suit, and in case of success he will be entitled to proprietary possession of the above mentioned one-half share, or one-half of the share which may be decreed which can remain joint or be partitioned by him as he pleases." In the course of the litigation the original plaintiffs compromised the suits with the appellant and withdrew from them leaving the respondent to prosecute them alone. Held (reversing on this point the decision of the Courts in India) that the agreements (which constituted his only right to sue) conferred upon the respondent no present right to the possession of any share in the property in suit. He would only have the right to possession in case of success, and success had not been achieved. Until then he was merely a co-owner in a certain undivided share of the property. There was no present grant or assignment to him of any separate share of the property, divided or undivided and he could not therefore maintain the suit. Achal Ram v. Kazim Husain Khan, 27 All. 271; L. Construction of will—Rules of justice equity and good conscience—Devise to eldest son and his lawful male children according to law of inheritance—Mortgages made by testator as full owner and mortgages made by son with an estate for life only—Rights of mortyagee—Alternative case set up on appeal—Costs.—T. S. a domiciled resident of the North Western Provinces of India, died on the 9th of November, 1864, leaving a will dated the 22nd of October, 1864, and therefore before the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) came into force whereby he made provision that certain villages, houses and other property should "at my demise descend to my eldest son T. B. S. and to his lawful male children according to the law of inheritance and in the event of my eldest son T. B. S. dying without lawful male children to my female children, or in the event of their death to the female children born in wedlock of my sons in succession." The testator had in 1853 mortgaged his property to the extent of Rs. 50,000 with interest and his son T. B. S. after he succeeded to the property, further mortgaged it in 1867, 1869, and 1872, and in execution of decrees obtained against him on those mortgages the property was sold and his interest herein was acquired by the various auction purchasers. T. B. S. died in 1900, without lawful male children and was succeeded by the second son of the testator, the present appellant, who in 1905 and 1906 brought the present suits for ejectment against the auction purchasers, in which he prayed for decrees for "full proprietary possession" and the suits were dealt with on that footing in the Courts in India, the High Court, however only dismissing the suits because there was no specific claim for redemption. On his appeal part of the appellant's case was that the High Court instead of dismissing the suits, should have made decrees for possession conditional upon payment of the debts binding on the estate of the testator; and during the hearing it was conceded by counsel that on the construction of the will the appellant was only a life-tenant of the property. Held that the regulation of the succession under the will was to be determined by the rule of "justice equity and good conscience," that the bequest was to be read in its entirety and together, and that so read there was in it no intention that his son T. B. S. should have an absolute ownership: the testator intended to regulate the succession after the death of T. B. S. and settle the mode of the subsequent enjoyment of the property, and such detailed regulations were only natural, necessary and entirely in place if T. B. S. was intended to be merely a tenant for life. Held, therefore, that the rights under mortgages granted by T. B. S. ceased at his death, and that the appellant, as the next male heir, was entitled to the enjoyment of the estate for life free from any rights so acquired. The case, however, was very different with regard to the rights acquired under mortgages granted by the testator himself. Even if T. B. S. renewed such mortgages
